In a review of other police matters, top commanders reported that after the Democratic National Convention, a crackdown on prostitutes in the Midtown area was eased; that "911" emergency telephone service has been improved and that no further police layoffs were imminent.

System Tested in Night Court

An experimental pre-arraignment system has been conducted for more than a year in night and weekend courts in the Bronx and Queens. At a meeting of high police and city officials, Nicholas Scoppetta, the chairman of the city's Justice Coordinating Council, said the program would probably be expanded to all courts in the five boroughs by the middle of October.

Mr. Scoppetta said discussions were still going on with the city's five District Attorneys and David Ross, a state Supreme Court justice who is also the administrative judge of the city's courts.

Justice Ross, along with District Attorneys Robert M. Morgenthau of Manhattan and Eugene Gold of Brooklyn, previously opposed the plan. None of

PROGRESS REPORTED IN KISSINGER TALKS WITH SOUTH AFRICAN

SECRETARY MIGHT SEE SMITH

Consults With Nonwhite Leaders as Well as Vorster and Is Urged to Help End Apartheid

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

PRETORIA, South Africa, Sept. 18—Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger was reported tonight to have made further progress in his discussions with Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa on both the key issues of independence for South-West Africa and transition to black majority rule in Rhodesia.

Reporters were told tonight that Mr. Kissinger, who had earlier rejected a meeting with Ian D. Smith, head of the white minority government in Rhodesia, might decide to see him in Pretoria tomorrow.

Mr. Smith, who is eager to see Mr. Kissinger, arrived here this morning, ostensibly to see a rugby match. He consulted with Mr. Vorster to continue discussions begun earlier in the week.

Vorster Relays Smith's Position

Mr. Vorster relayed to Mr. Kissinger tonight Mr. Smith's latest position on majority rule for Rhodesian blacks. Based on this information Mr. Kissinger planned to decide whether to see Mr. Smith.

No details of what constituted the reported progress were divulged to reporters. Therefore it was impossible for them to gauge how far Mr. Kissinger had brought the various parties close to agreement.

The Secretary has said that he would not meet Mr. Smith unless he had advance assurances that such a session would produce significant concessions that would be welcomed by black African leaders. Mr. Kissinger has also said that he was aware that if such a meeting with Mr. Smith failed to produce such results, the United States could be accused by black Africans of consorting with the Rhodesian whites rather than working to replace them, as Mr. Kissinger in April promised the United States would so.

Meets With Nonwhite Leaders

Mr. Kissinger spent much of the afternoon consulting with nonwhite South African leaders, who urged him to use his influence to end their country's policy of racial separation before time ran out for peaceful change and violence engulfed their nation.

On the question of South-West Africa, also known as Namibia, Mr. Kissinger reportedly made the progress he had expected on technical details. Such details are holding up the convening of a

3 Networks and Voters' League Deadlocked on Televising Debates

By JOHN W. FINNEY
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18—The three commercial television networks and the League of Women Voters reached at least a temporary impasse today over the terms for televising next week's debate between two Presidential candidates.

The impasse developed over the networks' demands that they be permitted to take shots of the audience while televising the debate scheduled for Thursday night between President Ford and Jimmy Carter, the Democratic Presidential candidate. Representatives of the two candidates and the League of Women Voters, which is sponsoring the debate, had previously agreed that the television cameras would be limited to showing the two candidates.

Let Candidates Know

Officials of the commercial networks and the Public Broadcasting System met here today with representatives of the league to discuss the restrictions, as well as the secondary issue of the method being used to select the panelists who will question the candidates.

About an hour after the three-hour-long meeting began, Richard Salant, president of CBS News, stalked out of the meeting in what he described as "a fit of temper" after being told to "shut up" by Charles E. Walker, one of the chairmen of the league committee organizing the debates.

The only concession made by the committee was to agree to convey the networks' objections to restrictions on television coverage to the two Presidential candidates.

Officials of CBS, NBC and ABC all raised doubts that they would televise next week's debate if they were not permitted to take "cutaway shots" of the audience in Philadelphia's Walnut Street Theater, where the debate will be held. None of the network executives, however, flatly stated that the debate would not be televised if the restrictions were not lifted.

Only the Public Broadcasting System committed itself to televising the debate, although a PBS official said his network also objected in principle to restrictions on camera coverage.

The argument raised by officials of the four networks was that the debate was "a news event" and that as a "matter of journalistic right" they should be per-

A FEELING OF CRISIS IS RISING IN POLAND

Economic and Political Pressures Are Termed 'Very Dangerous'

By FLORA LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

WARSAW, Sept. 18—Poland's Communist Party leaders have become acutely and painfully aware of what several high officials candidly call their "credibility gap" and are engaging in intense secret arguments over what, if anything, they can do about it.

Talks with a number of important Communist sources, non-Communist people in various walks of life and Western diplomats disclosed an atmosphere of extreme tension here. The words "very dangerous" were used by many to describe the situation since the Government backed down on its plan to raise food prices after workers' riots last June.

A Mood of Urgency

Some Communist officials spoke with an urgency that seemed to verge on desperation, in a manner that has scarcely been heard since the upheavals of 1956, which nearly brought a confrontation between Polish and Soviet troops and led to the Hungarian uprising that year.

There is no suggestion of any such conflict now. Both Poles and Western diplomats said they were convinced that Moscow's central concern was to keep the country calm and stable, and that the Soviet Union would not object to virtually any measures the Polish leadership

While the residents are deadly serious about their move, they also appreciate its jocund side, addressing one another as "Reverend" and asking one another, "Have you seen the light?"

One of them, Cal Crary, burst through the door of the Robin Hood diner one morning last week while a group of men dressed in overalls and shabby work clothes hunched over their cups of coffee.

"Hallelujah," he bellowed, waving his green forest ranger's hat.

"Hallelujah, reverend," shouted somebody down at the end of the counter.

Mr. Crary, a large, rumpled, white-haired man, has worked as a ranger on the Boy Scout reservation in the town of Hardenburgh for six years. A month ago, he became one of the first to become a minister of the Universal Life Church, a California-based organization that offers degrees by mail. And last Monday night, at a big meeting in the community hall, half of the town's residents followed his lead.

Supervisor Backed Plan

They were all ordained by George McClain, a 41-year-old plumber from the nearby village of Liberty. Mr. McClain, by taking a series of correspondence courses, had become a bishop of the Universal Life Church last November.

Some property owners must pay as much as two-thirds of their meager incomes in school, town and county taxes. The main reason for the rapid escalation is the influx of tax-exempt groups whose

Big-City Schools, in Money Pinch, Face Cutbacks Like New York's

By GENE I. MAEROFF
Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO, Sept. 18 — An increasing number of big-city school systems, beset by staggering financial problems, are edging toward impoverishment of the sort that has produced massive cutbacks in the public schools of New York City.

In Chicago, where the nation's second-largest school system had to close 16 days early last June because it ran out of money, the 26,000 teachers this week resignedly accepted a new contract that provided no salary increases.

There remains the possibility that part or all of the $48 million saved by the early closing may be lost to the school system in the form of a penalty assessed by the state as a result of Chicago's not having completed a mandated 176-day school year.

The situation is so dire that the 1976-77 budget that Dr. Joseph P. Hannon, the school superintendent, proposed on Wednesday projects a deficit of $147.1 million, a figure that could lead to extensive mid-year salary reductions and dismissals or another early closing.

In other cities, Washington has already frozen positions and laid plans for a payless furlough of its 12,000 school employees in December; Detroit has abolished interscholastic sports; Miami is saving almost $1 million by reducing the amount of paper, materials and supplies given to students, and New Orleans has put a moratorium on teacher participation in in-service training, saving $250,000.

Educational decision-makers in more and more big-city school systems are forced to revise priorities and slash programs as they are squeezed by escalating costs and dwindling local revenues.

Most districts, whenever they can, are trying to concentrate the cuts in non-classroom areas, notably the deferral of

Peking Throng Bids Mao Farewell

By ROSS H. MUNRO
The Globe and Mail, Toronto

PEKING, Sept. 18—At least 750,000 Chinese gathered in the center of their ancient capital this afternoon to mourn Chairman Mao Tse-tung at a brief and austere rally that ended in a wave of sobbing.

Prime Minister Hua Kuo-feng read a memorial speech from a specially built rostrum immediately in front of Tien An Men—the Gate of Heavenly Peace—where Mao had triumphantly declared the founding of the People's Republic of China 27 years ago.

Mr. Hua, now the top senior Communist Party leader in China, called on the party, the army and the people of China, in an address that was the Chinese equivalent of a funeral oration, to "carry on the cause left behind by Chairman Mao."

After the speech many of the people—officially estimated to number a million—standing in Tien An Men Square and along the Avenue of Eternal Peace for a mile in each direction, began to sob. It was controlled, rather than hysterical, but the sound of hundreds of thousands of mourners reached the upper stories of the Peking Hotel where some foreigners were looking on.

The memorial rally began at 3 in the Earlier, the Secretary was urged by black South African leaders to use his influence to end apartheid before violence engulfed South Africa. [Page 1, Col.6.]

Big-city school systems in many places may be facing, because of a lack of funds, the same sort of massive cutbacks that have struck the public schools in New York City. In Chicago, where schools closed last June when the money ran out, teachers accepted a new contract recently without a wage increase. In many other cities, programs are being slashed and goals once thought obtainable are receding because of the forced reductions. [1:3-4.]

Moscow, Puzzled by Ford-Carter Contest, Worries About Detente

By CHRISTOPHER S. WREN
Special to The New York Times

MOSCOW, Sept 17—The American Presidential campaign seems to be leaving Moscow puzzled and somewhat apprehensive.

The indications are that the Russians are still comfortable with President Ford because his meetings with Leonid I. Brezhnev, the Communist Party chief, made him a known political quantity to the Kremlin.

But Soviet analysts who have studied American public opinion polls are apparently sending up the message that Jimmy Carter, his Democratic opponent, might win.

Consequently, the Soviet press has pointedly refrained from taking sides. In private conversations, Soviet officials also demur that predicting the outcome would mean "interfering in your internal affairs," a scruple that has not been evident in Moscow about some other foreign elections.

Harriman Visits Moscow

The cautious reaction points up a broader dilemma facing the Kremlin, which has sought stability in its ties with other governments. Now, the death of Mao Tse-tung in China and the coming elections in the United States, West Germany and Japan have created uncertainties about the continuing policies of Moscow's principal ideological adversaries.

Soviet concern over the future of Soviet-American relations is likely to be assuaged somewhat by the current visit of W. Averill Harriman. The senior Democratic Party statesman, who arrived in Moscow on Thursday, will be seeing Mr. Brezhnev and other officials during his week-long stay. "I think they're happy to have someone come here who can explain the vernacular of the campaign," the former New York Governor said today.

Mr. Harriman described his visit as a private one "motivated by misunderstandings that exist during a campaign year." He confirmed that he had consulted before his departure with both Mr. Carter and the State Department but said he was not on a mission for either. "I felt that my coming would be useful no matter who is elected," Mr. Harriman said.

Ford Chided by Russians

When detente emerged last spring as an issue in the American primaries, it was initially dismissed here as election-year talk that would not really alter the relationship. Now, at least a few Soviet insiders are wondering aloud whether such persistent criticism of Soviet-American accommodation might leave scars when the November elections are over.

Both Mr. Ford and Mr. Carter have been taken to task in the Soviet press for some tough remarks about the Soviet Union. The Communist Party newspaper Pravda told Russians recently that "the policy of aggravating tension is rejected by broad sections of the American people."

The President has been faulted a number of times for having made concessions to the Republican right wing in his bitter fight with Ronald Reagan and for having permitted a hard line on the Soviet Union in the Republican Party platform.

The Russians seem frustrated that they do not know much more about Mr. Carter's foreign policy views than they did when he came to their attention last spring. "He's a prophet, not a politician," a prominent Soviet journalist quipped privately. "Who can tell anything about prophets?"

The principal concern being expressed privately here is what effect the campaign will have on the strategic weapons agreement that Mr. Ford and Mr. Brezhnev outlined at their Vladivostok meeting late in 1974.

Progress on the accord has become deadlocked over technical disagreements on whether the latest Soviet and American weapons systems should be included under the ceiling of 2,400 delivery vehicles.

Several Soviet analysts believe that if President Ford gets re-elected, the new arms pact could be reached shortly afterwards. If Mr. Carter is elected, they note, another agreement might have to be worked out. This has led some diplomats to suspect that the Kremlin does not really want a strategic arms agreement before the election.

At the same time, there is concern that the time limit on the Vladivostok accord could expire next year before it gets enacted. And some Soviet insiders seem to realize that a period of acclimatization would have to follow a Democratic victory. "We already know who Ford is," one said. "We have spoken with him. But it would take us at least six months to get to know Carter."

Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Sept. 18—Residential areas of Beirut were heavily shelled today and rival factions reported an intensification of fighting on all fronts in the country.

The Moslem quarters of west Beirut were shelled at intervals throughout the day. Several shells fell near the UNESCO building, where Palestinians and leftists were holding a public rally.

Leftist sources said the escalation was mainly in Beirut's museum area near the line dividing the city's Moslem and Christian sections.

The two sides accused each other of responsibility for what some quarters have described as a sudden and grave deterioration in the security situation.

According to hospital sources, about 50 people were wounded, some seriously, in the indiscriminate bombardment of several Moslem sections of the city.

Right-wing Christian radio stations also reported that many mortar shells had fallen in the Christian quarters in east Beirut.

The Voice of Lebanon, the station of the right-wing Phalangist Party, said the clashes in the southern suburbs of the capital and the eastern mountains gained in intensity last night and today.

Some Lebanese sources said the development was all the more serious because it came only five days before President-elect Elias Sarkis was to take office from Suleiman Franjieh.

If the tension on the dividing line, where the Parliament has taken temporary quarters, is not relaxed soon the inauguration might not take place as scheduled, Lebanese warned.

Camille Chamoun, the Minister of Interior who was recently appointed by President Franjieh as Defense Minister as well, pointed out that Mr. Sarkis would not be able to assume power without taking the oath of office before Parliament.

Mr. Sarkis was in Cairo today holding talks with President Anwar el-Sadat. He spent the night in Damascus, where he met for three hours with President Hafez al-Assad, according to the Damascus radio.

Mr. Sarkis is scheduled to return tomorrow to the town of Chtaura in east Lebanon to resume his talks with Yasir Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, and Syrian and Arab League officials on ending the Lebanese fighting before the inauguration on Thursday.

Earlier Talks Inconclusive

A meeting they held in Chtaura yesterday ended inconclusively, and the discussions had to be interrupted because of the trip by Mr. Sarkis to the Egyptian capital.

Meanwhile, there have been reports of interparty clashes in the Christian areas. According to people in the areas contacted by telephone, the situation in Christian-controlled east Beirut was tense today, with militiamen of the Phalangist Party in the streets in force. The Phalangists were equipped with heavy machine guns and toured the area in jeeps and armored cars.

The right-wing Amchit radio said that a closed-door meeting had been held by Mr. Chamoun, Bashir Gemayel and Abu Arz. The purpose of the meeting was not disclosed, but the three spoke of interparty solidarity among right-wing groups.

SWEDISH SOCIALISM FACING TEST TODAY

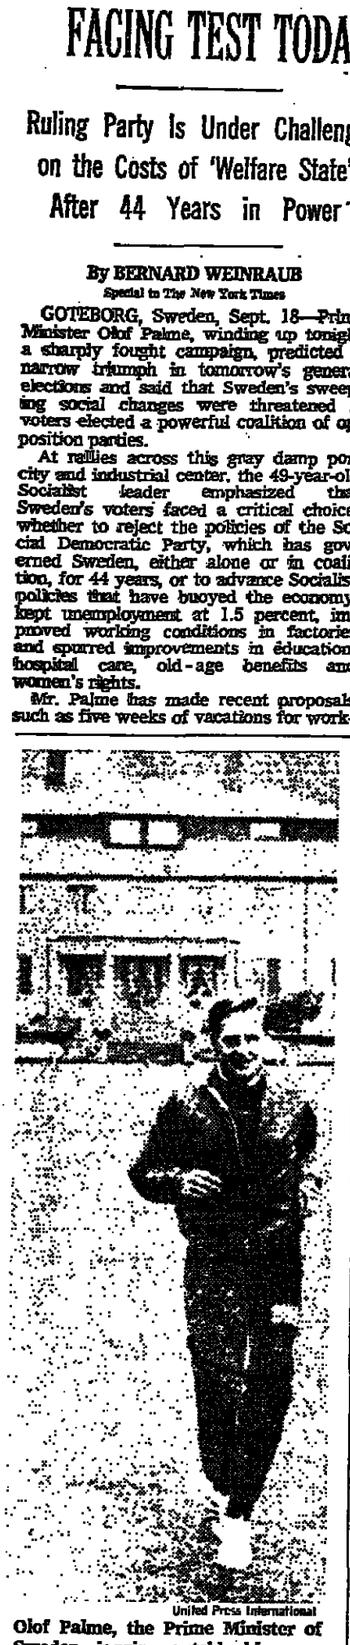
Ruling Party Is Under Challenge on the Costs of 'Welfare State' After 44 Years in Power

By BERNARD WEINRAUB
Special to The New York Times

GOTEBORG, Sweden, Sept. 18—Prime Minister Olof Palme, winding up tonight a sharply fought campaign, predicted a narrow triumph in tomorrow's general elections and said that Sweden's sweeping social changes were threatened if voters elected a powerful coalition of opposition parties.

At rallies across this gray damp port city and industrial center, the 49-year-old Socialist leader emphasized that Sweden's voters faced a critical choice: whether to reject the policies of the Social Democratic Party, which has governed Sweden, either alone or in coalition, for 44 years, or to advance Socialist policies that have buoyed the economy, kept unemployment at 1.5 percent, improved working conditions in factories and spurred improvements in education, hospital care, old-age benefits and women's rights.

Mr. Palme has made recent proposals such as five weeks of vacations for workers and a priority program to build day-care centers for children.



United Press International
Olof Palme, the Prime Minister of Sweden, jogging outside his summer home in Harpsund last week.

Asked if 44 years were too long for one party to govern, Mr. Palme said at a news conference here: "I don't think I should lie flat on my back out of compassion for the opposition."

He said with a smile: "The country was run by the bourgeois parties for hundreds of years. We've just had our first 44."

High Taxes a Campaign Issue

Mr. Palme, speaking to foreign journalists in the auditorium of a trade union headquarters, said that high taxes were clearly a campaign issue, and he briefly discussed the case of Ingmar Bergman, the film director who left Sweden last spring after charging that he had been hounded by tax authorities and the bureaucracy.

"The bureaucracy usually deals with real tax swindlers and Ingmar Bergman is most certainly innocent," said Mr. Palme, who is a friend of the director. "It is a cultural clash. Basically it is a case of an individual—a great artist and an extremely sensitive person—and the tax collector. I certainly express my sympathies for his feelings."

Mr. Palme added: "I don't think it will have a great impact on Swedish voters."

The election, expected to be one of the closest in years, pits Mr. Palme's Social Democrats against a coalition of three moderate parties that have campaigned on such issues as the "unhealthy" longevity of Socialist rule, excessive taxes, concentration of power, growing bureaucratization of the "cradle-to-grave" welfare state and, in recent weeks, the Government's nuclear energy policy. It is this issue, Mr. Palme said today, that may prove pivotal.

"I don't know if I've won the people on the issue," he said. "We have taken our position. Nearly 70 percent of our energy supply comes from oil, which is expensive, makes us dependent and has even greater risks that nuclear energy."

Mr. Palme's Government has pushed through a program to build 13 atomic reactors to supply 40 percent of Sweden's electricity by 1985. This would make Sweden one of the world's biggest per capita consumers of nuclear energy.

A Swing to Social Democrats

His key opponent, Thorbjorn Falldin, the Center Party leader and probable Prime Minister in any non-Socialist government, has said that nuclear energy was dangerous and that he would kill the reactor program lest "the lives of future generations were placed at risk."

Mr. Falldin, a sheep farmer with broad appeal in rural areas, has urged energy savings in the environment-conscious nation and research into alternative forms of energy.

The campaign itself has witnessed a sharp swing in support in favor of the Social Democrats, although the result is expected to be very close. Last spring, following the tax troubles of Mr Bergman, opinion polls showed the non-Socialists as having the support of 54 percent of the voters, against only 38.5 percent of the Social Democrats and 4.5 percent for the Communists. It was the sharpest drop for the Social Democrats in more than 40 years.

India Is Lifting Rules on Press For Foreigners

By WILLIAM BORDERS
Special to The New York Times

NEW DELHI, Sept. 18—The Indian Government, in a gesture of good will toward foreign correspondents working here, announced today that it was withdrawing the censorship regulations that it has tried for the past year to impose upon them.

There was no indication, however, of any lessening of the rigid control that the Government has exerted over Indian newspapers in the 15 months since censorship was imposed under Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's sweeping declaration of emergency.

The withdrawal of the so-called "censorship guidelines" has little immediate practical effect, since, as the Government knows, most of the Western reporters here have been ignoring them anyway. However, both sides regarded it as a significant gesture. And the tone of the meeting at which Information Minister V. C. Shukla announced the changes today was dramatically different from his earlier meetings with the foreign press; his mood was conciliatory, friendly and understanding.

"We do not expect you to sing our praises," Mr. Shukla said, as he sat sipping a soft drink with two dozen correspondents. "I don't think your papers have sent you here to praise this country. What we expect of you here is only faithful reporting of the events, and accurate reporting."

He did indicate, though, that foreign publications would continue to be banned in India if they contain "something extremely objectionable."

Mr. Shukla said there was a possibility that the Government might permit the return to India of some of the seven foreign correspondents, five Americans and two Britons, whom it expelled in the seven months immediately following the emergency declaration in June of 1975. "Let the individual cases come before us and we shall examine them," he said. "Each case will be treated on its merits. There is no prejudice, no predetermined attitude about any particular paper."

One Outright Ban

In the past, Government officials have said privately that in the case of The Washington Post at least there was an outright ban.

Lewis M. Simons, The Post's resident correspondent, was expelled four days after the emergency declaration, and no other Post correspondents have been permitted to work here. In the case of The Los Angeles Times and The Associated Press, by contrast, new resident correspondents have been permitted in to take the jobs of colleagues who had been expelled.

The other publications whose correspondents were expelled were Newsweek, The Far Eastern Economic Review, The Daily Telegraph and The Times of London. The British Broadcasting Corporation correspondent withdrew voluntarily last year, and finally announced last month that it was closing down its office here because of censorship restrictions.

Asked if the B.B.C. might now remain after all, Mr. Shukla said: "If they make a request, we shall certainly consider it. B.B.C. went out of this place on their own; we didn't throw them out."

The guidelines that the Government abrogated today were pieced together in a rush during several hectic days in July 1975, after the Government discovered its inability to control the way the foreign press covered the emergency declaration and the suspension of civil liberties. They prohibited the reporting of any political arrest or of the name of any of the thousands of political prisoners, or of any opposition actipities, rallies or speeches, including even speeches in Parliament.

Deportation Threatened

The Government delivered the guidelines to all the foreign correspondents and asked them under pain of deportation to sign a pledge that read: "I undertake to comply with the censorship guidelines for the press and instructions issued thereunder." Most of the correspondents balked, and it was at this point that the correspondents of Newsweek, the Telegraph and The Times of London were expelled for refusing to sign.

But a few days later the Government modified the wording of the statement it wanted correspondents to sign: "I have received the censorship guidelines of the Government of India," the new statement declared. "I agree to undertake full responsibility for my reports in regard to these guidelines and other instructions issued thereunder by the responsible authorities."

Many correspondents, including those of The New York Times, agreed to sign this modified statement. A. M. Rosenthal, managing editor of The Times, explained the paper's view of the new wording: "In our opinion, it amounts simply to acknowledgement of receipt of a Government document and a statement by the correspondent that he will be responsible for whatever he writes. This is obviously true of all our correspondents everywhere. In our view, this involves no commitments by our correspondents in India that would prevent them from writing what they consider full, accurate and fair reports."

TAIWAN ANALYSTS PREDICT INSTABILITY FOR CHINESE

Special to The New York Times

TAIPEI, Taiwan, Sept. 18—Chinese Nationalist analysts here believe that the death of Chairman Mao Tse-tung will plunge China into a period of prolonged political instability that will ease some of the pressure on Taiwan in foreign relations.

In their view, conflicts between the radical and moderate factions in the Chinese leadership are not only too deep to be reconciled, but can now be expected to intensify.

"Mao's death, the loss of his patronage, is a tremendous blow to the radicals," said Warren Kuo, a deputy director of the Institute of International Relations, "since they had not had time to consolidate their position. Now the moderates, who were unable to organize themselves as long as Mao was alive, will begin to coalesce to insure their survival."

The only alternative the analysts see is that one faction will attempt to wrest control by force, leading to even more turmoil. From Nationalist China's perspective, either development would be welcome, since a mainland Government besieged by internal problems should have less time to pursue policies aimed at isolating Taiwan.

750,000 IN PEKING ATTEND MAO EULOGY

afternoon, with all participants standing for three minutes in silent tribute to Chairman Mao—everyone in China had been asked to do that. The wailing of sirens and factory whistles filled the air of Peking.

The whole city seemed to stand still. The only visible movement was that of smoke rising from the chimneys of factories whose workers had been able to interrupt their chores only momentarily.

No reference was made at the memorial rally to the final disposition of the body of Chairman Mao, to which 300,000 paid their respects at the Great Hall of People following his death at 82 on Sept. 9. It was still uncertain whether the body would be preserved, entombed, or would be cremated as many of China's other revolutionary heroes have been.

Earlier in the afternoon there were scenes throughout Peking that must have been duplicated everywhere in China. Small knots of people gathered outside their homes to listen to the radio and await the three minutes of tribute at 3 P.M.; larger, organized groups sat down in front of television sets set up outdoors by neighborhood committees, or marched solemnly to memorial rallies at schools and places of work.

On television, Tian An Men Square was calm, ordered and decorous. On the magenta-colored rostrum, decorated and surrounded by evergreens, flowers, wreaths and funeral bunting, stood virtually the entire Chinese leadership. Arrayed in the square, before the leaders, were blocks of mourners—long rectangles of army men in green tunics, white-shirted schoolchildren and blue-shirted workers and peasants.

Only the Select Attend

An official announcement said that 1 million people had attended the rally, but that might have represented a rounding-out of a somewhat smaller figure. An independent calculation suggests that the attendance was approximately 750,000 persons. The rally was not open to the general public; only members of selected groups were allowed to attend.

Chiang Ching, Mao Tse-tung's widow, was wearing black and had a black kerchief; she seemed grief-stricken, though she maintained the composure that she had displayed all week. Some of the oldest leaders were so frail that they required constant assistance in standing throughout the 30-minute rally. Soong Ching-ling, the 86-year-old, United States-educated widow of China's first republican President, Sun Yat-sen, sat in a chair and leaned on a cane.

As Prime Minister Hua delivered the memorial speech in his thick Shansi accent, the picture that Chinese television viewers saw on their screens was of two men—Mr. Hua and Wang Hung-wen. Mr. Wang, the second-ranking member of the Communist Party, known for his radical Shanghai background, stood beside and just behind the Prime Minister, silently and intently following the text that Mr. Hua was reading aloud.

The Achievements of Mao

As the three minutes of silence began, an army band struck up the chords of the Funeral March that the people of China have heard countless times during the last 10 days. Then, after the National Anthem and the Internationale were played, Mr. Hua began hi s funeral oration, which was broadcast live throughout China.

He saluted Mao as "the founder and wise leader of the Communist Party of China, the Chinese People's Liberation Army and the People's Republic of China."

"It was under Chairman Mao's leadership that the Chinese people who had long suffered from oppression and exploitation, won emancipation and became masters of the country," Mr. Hua said. "It was under Chairman Mao's leadership that the disaster-plagued Chinese nation rose to its feet. The Chinese people love, trust and esteem Chairman Mao from the bottom of their hearts."

The Long Road to Victory

He reviewed Mao's revolutionary career, which saw him lead a once small and embattled group of Communists to the point, a quarter of a century ago, when they achieved victory and then unified all of mainland China. Mr. Hua did not gloss over Chairman Mao's struggles with other leaders in the Communist Party; he credited him with victory over a long line of "opportunists" and "counterrevolutionary" leaders up to and including Teng Hsiao-ping, the powerful Deputy Prime Minster who was purged earlier this year.

For the future, the underlying message of Mr. Hua's speech seemed to be one of continuity in the ideological line that has emerged during the past several months. He called explicitly for a continuation in the criticism of Teng Hsiao-ping, but he also issued a plea for an end to factionalism, employing an old quotation from Chairman Mao.

"The whole Party, the whole Army and the people of all nationalities throughout the country must respond to the call of the Party Central Committee, actively turn grief into strength, carry on the cause left by Chairman Mao:

'Practice Marxism, not revisionism; unite and don't split; be open and above board; and don't intrigue and conspire,' and, under the leadership of the Party Central Committee, carry through to the end the cause of the proletarian revolution in China that Chairman Mao pioneered."

Bows, and 'The East Is Red'

"Eternal glory to the great leader and teacher, Chairman Mao Tse-tung," Mr. Hua concluded. He then led the people in three bows to the black-and-white photographic portrait of Chairman Mao which stood at the center of the Gate of Heavenly Peace. As Wang Hung-wen called out the timing of the bows, everyone in the entire area bent from the waist in unison.

Then, with the playing of "The East Is Red," which has becomme the anthem of Chinese Communism, people began weeping. A moment or two later they were told they could rest and, as they sat down, many buried their faces in their arms.

Within 30 minutes groups of mourners were being marched away to the assembly points beyond the cordoned-off area where trucks and buses awaited them. Some marched, some ran, but the scene was quiet and orderly.

Lineup of Leaders for Mao Eulogy Indicates an Attempt at Continuity

By FOX BUTTERFIELD
Special to The New York Times

HONG KONG, Sept. 18—Today's carefully organized memorial rally in Peking for the late Chairman Mao Tse-tung appeared designed to reinforce a sense of continuity in China's leadership and policies, according to analysts here.

As expected, China's surviving senior party leaders, headed by Prime Minister Hua Kuo-feng, appeared in strict party rank on the rostrum above Tien An Men, the Gate of Heavenly Peace. Mr. Hua's delivery of the eulogy, befitted his job as first deputy chairman of the Communist Party, now the highest-ranking post in the country.

The appearance of Mr. Hua and the other party leaders in correct hierarchical order followed a series of other appearances, also in proper rank, that China's leaders have made at memorial trvices since Mao died on Sept. 9. Similarly, Mr. Hua's call for continuance of Mao's cause and unity behind the party leadership echoed an appeal in a major editorial in Peking newspapers this week to heed a Mao injunction to "act according to principles laid down."

A Collective Leadership Seen

On the basis of such evidence, scant as it may be, most analysts here believe Mr. Hua will head a collective leadership team for the immediate future and will generally follow current policies. But the analysts were acutely aware, too, that at the funeral for Prime Minister Chou En-lai last January, the eulogy was read by Teng Hsiao-ping, then the Prime Minister.

At the time Mr. Teng seemed certain to succeed to the nation's leadership. But it was the last time he has been seen in public, and in April he was ousted from all his posts after being accused of being a rightist.

The deliberate decision to invite no foreigners to the ceremony today seemed another example of the strong tradition of ethnocentricity that still exists in China. The very name, in Chinese, for the country—Chung-kuo, or central country—implies a feeling of superiority that was confirmed over the centuries when China's contacts with the outside world were limited to what Chinese considered barbarians on their borders.

This ethnocentricity was reinforced under the Communists by Chairman Mao's insistence on "self-reliance," building up China without depending on the imperialist powers that humiliated the nation over the past 100 years.

Clues to Succesion Still Dim

The funeral rally, televised live throughout China and monitored here in Hong Kong, offered few other clues to the many puzzles of who will now emerge as Peking's leaders, or what actual policies will be pursued. "There were no surprises today, which is what they probably intended," said one analyst here.

The television broadcast from Peking memorial was followed by one of a similar mass ceremony in Canton, presided over by the few remaining provincial party leaders who did not go to Peking this week.

At first it was thought that virtually all of the 176 surviving members of the party's Central Committee had made the journey to the capital and hence a party meeting could already be under way on the question of succession. But the Canton service, in a large stadium, showed that two regular members of the Central Committee and one alternate member were still in Canton.

However, that did not rule out the possibility that these and other Central Committee members—who might have stayed in other provinces to take charge of memorial arrangements—could now go to Peking. Whatever the fact, the number of party leaders in Peking this week is already the biggest since the last party congress in 1973.

Paradoxically, analysts believe, Mao's death makes calling a new party congress more urgent and at the same time more difficult, because of factional disputes.

S REPORTED INGER TALKS

eneva in which South ntrols the territory, and groups would meet to who arrived here yes- nsultations with black mia and Zambia, will wo nations on Monday to pass on the results of the Vorster-Smith talks.

In the meeting with 11 black leaders at the American Embassy, Mr. Kissinger thanked them for their views and promised to consider what the United States could do when he returned to Washington.

Earlier in the day, when he addressed 150 embassy employees, including about 30 blacks, Mr. Kissinger repeated his criticism of South Africa's apartheid policy, but less harshly than he has done in the United States. Mr. Kissinger clearly wanted to avoid a public rift with his host, Prime Minister John Vorster, during delicate negotiations.

Mr. Kissinger said to the employees: "We have had occasion to say that as far as the United States is concerned the concept of human dignity must have universal application. We cannot agree with any concept that is based on the separation of races."

He continued: "We know you are here in a difficult post in which you have to perform, with tact and delicacy, a complicated mission, and I think this is the duty of the Department of State and the Foreign Service."

Mr. Kissinger, aware that the first visit by a high-level United States official to South Africa ran the risk of appearing to dignify the apartheid policy, spent most of the day trying to send diplomatic signals of American opposition to the policy without creating a dispute with Mr. Vorster, who has repeated his Government's commitment to apartheid in recent days.

Mr. Vorster and Mr. Kissinger conferred for two hours this morning.

The black leaders invited to the meeting with Mr. Kissinger are all recognized officials of tribes or organizations, and the choice was attacked by more militant blacks as unsatisfactory since it did not include those in prison or others with radical views.

But the remarks by the leaders who met with Mr. Kissinger were far from supportive of the Vorster Government's policy. The most outspoken was Mangosuthu G. Buthelezi, chief of the Zulus, the largest of the black tribes. He is an opponent of the Government's efforts to create independent nations for the black tribes under Pretoria's management.

The meeting was closed, but Chief Buthelezi made his remarks public. He said that Mr. Kissinger must ask Mr. Vorster to convene a multiracial convention so that blacks and whites can work together for a new society.

"There is still time for you to help black leaders to exercise nonviolent options, and there is still time for a black-white partnership in the reconstruction of South African society," the chief said.

"There is, however, so little time left in which to employ nonviolent means to effect a multiracial solution, and there is so little to encourage one to continue in nonviolent methods that for all practical puposes time has run out for South Africa," he added.

The Zulu chief said that "American influence in southern Africa which does not dramatically strengthen the hand of those of us who have so far adopted the nonviolent option could assist to ring down the curtains on that option."

Sonny Leon, a labor leader of coloreds, or those of mixed race, said after the meeting with Mr. Kissinger that "everyone thought it was worthwhile."

He said that Mr. Kissinger had done little speaking as they sat in a circle in the embassy's living room and as Winston Lord, one of Mr. Kissinger's aides, took notes.

Mr. Leon said that Mr. Kissinger had asked who favored the Government's homelands policy of setting up independent black states, the first of which is to be created next month and called Trankei.

A Jailed Black Relays Warning To Kissinger

By JOHN F. BURNS
Special to The New York Times

JOHANNESBURG, Sept. 18 — While Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger was meeting in Pretoria today with a group of nonwhite representatives, hundreds of more radical black leaders were in jail cells, under indefinite detention without trial.

Many of these leaders have vigorously opposed the United States decision to deal directly with Prime Minister John Vorster and have warned that future American relations with a black-ruled South Africa may be jeopardized by the Kissinger-Vorster talks, which are widely regarded by black radicals as reinforcing the position of the white Government here.

One of the most prominent detainees, Steven Biko, spoke to this reporter some weeks ago about what he would tell Mr. Kissinger if he had the opportunity to meet him. At the time Mr. Biko was under a Government banning order, forbidding him to give interviews for publication.

The New York Times
Steven Biko photographed in King William's Town, South Africa, shortly before he was arrested.

He agreed that his remarks should be published if he was arrested. Recently he was seized by the security police at his home in Kingwilliamstown, 450 miles south of Johannesburg.

On the question of relations between South Africa and the United States, he said that black radicals here would like to see "less of the Kissinger-Vorster type of talks and more explicit support, both morally and money-wise, for the liberation struggle in Azania," the name given to South Africa by black nationalists.

Urges an Ultimatum

In particular, he said, the United States should issue an ultimatum to South Africa to abandon apartheid, its policy of racial separation, or face a complete trade, sports and cultural boycott. It should make "a more realistic use" of its vote in the United Nations, supporting moves to oust South Africa from the world body and its agencies, he said.

On the question of American investment in South Africa, involving more than 300 companies and a total of more than $2 billion, Mr. Biko said that the United States should ban any further investment and take steps to force those companies now operating here to leave. The attitude of a black government toward future relations with the United States, he said, would be governed by the readiness of the United States to take these and other restrictive measures during the present stage of the black struggle.

"I don't think that relations between America and Azania would necessarily be jeopardized, but I think our attitude would be heavily influenced by the attitudes that America takes towards the present process of change," he said. "America simply cannot afford to prop up the system at a time when it is being seriously challenged by progressive forces. If they do, and it is a question that has been raised in our minds by the Kissinger-Vorster talks, it means, ipso facto, a reassessment of our attitude towards future relations between us."

Mr. Biko's remarks took on new significance after a number of black organizations issued statements before Mr. Kissinger's talks warning that they were likely to reinforce the suspicions because those invited to the talks were mostly black leaders who cooperate in one way or another with the Government. If Mr. Kissinger wanted to hear the true voice of black South Africa, these groups maintained, he should have insisted on meeting some of the black leaders that the Government has detained, most of whom operate outside Government-created structures.

More Than 850 Blacks Detained

Altogether more than 850 blacks have been detained without trial since the anti-Government upheaval in black townships began three months ago. Of these, about 250 belong to the so-called black-consciousness groups, formed in recent years to carry the fight against apartheid.

Mr. Biko, aged 29, is widely regarded as a key figure in these groups. He was founder and first president of the South African Students' Organization, a black university group, and a major figure behind the Black People's Convention, the closest thing to a functioning black political party.

His discussion with this reporter took place at the offices of the Black Community Program, a self-help group in Kingwilliamstown. Mr. Biko's manner was mild, his responses laced with humorous accounts of brushes with authorities. He spoke of black rule in South Africa as an eventual certainty and indicated that he expected to play a role in it.

He made it clear that a government formed around the black-consciousness groups would follow a policy of black socialism, placing ssevere restraints on private enterprise and sharply cutting, if not eliminating, foreign investment.

they erupted on a wide scale. Non-Communists said the people generally were "really fed up" and one pointed out that the Roman Catholic Church has taken the unprecedented step of appealing to the people to make sacrifices and to have confidence in the Government's ability to cope with grave economic troubles.

"The Church knows what's going on better than anyone," he said, "They hear in the confessionals and such. They wouldn't have gone so far if they didn't think there could be real trouble."

The immediate problem is economic. But it involves the basic policy undertaken by the party chief, Edward Gierek, since he took over from Wladyslaw Gomulka, who had to resign after bloody workers' riots in December 1970.

Briefly, that policy was a crash development program, aimed at rapid improvement in the national economic base to raise living standards. It was based on a growth rate of 10 percent or more a year, financed by Western credits. Now the country is heavily in debt, unable to sustain the better living standards, at least until its investments begin to pay off significantly, and unwilling to place faith in the leadership'ss arguments that prosperity lies around the corner of a temporary austerity program.

"Things haven't been so bad since the war," said one Polish economics expert. "Oh yes, there are cars and television sets, but you can't buy matches, sugar is rationed, meat is hard to find. People have money. We created some inflation by a big increase in wages. But it make them all the angrier to get good pay and not be able to buy what they need with it."

Further, it is the conviction of well-informed sources that the Soviet Union cannot bail Poland out with big loans, as it did in 1970, because as one of them put it, "Things are even worse in the Soviet economy."

People Complain Bitterly

Experts outside the Government consider the only economic solution to be a sharp cutback in the heavyi nvestment policy, which would constitute an admission that it tried to go too far too fast, and a restructuring of prices that would impose a period of belt-tightening, which carries explosive political risks.

People both inside and outside the Communist Party complained bitterly, "Why don't they tell the truth? Why do they treat the public like children?"

But there is clearly no agreement with the party on how the public would react if all the harsh facts were made known, if the system of "consultation" with workers were indeed carried to the point of enabling them to speak freely, and if important changes were made in response to public pressures.

Prime Minister Piotr Jarosiewicz, who announced the plan for sharply increahed food prices last June, is now the person primarily blamed for the situation. Some important o fficials insist he should be ousted quickly. But others apparently are arguing that if the party drops one scapegoat, it will open the floodgate to demands that many more of the men at the top be swept away and no one could predict where it might end.

Mr. Gierek, who, all agreed, had achieved genuine popularity in the first few yearh of his leadership, has come under growing criticism both inside and outside the Communist Party.

However, it is also widely agreed that there is no current alternative to him and that he is probably the only one with a chance of keeping the situation in hand. Among some high party people, he is criticized for not being more assertive, not imposing himself on what is said to be a kind of cabal of technicianh who don't understand the political implications of their computerized decisions and don't permit the necessary public feedback to give them appropriate warnings.

Spanish Election Plans Opposed

By HENRY GINIGER
Special to The New York Times

MADRID, Sept. 18—Spain's political opposition is preparing to reject a Government plan that calls for elections before next June of a two-house Parliament that would have power to make changes in constitutional laws that have been in effect in Spain for 40 years.

But to make the rejection credible to the Spanish people, informed opposition sources say that an alternative will be presented and an agreement sought with the Government for its application. The alternative plan, which is said to call for an early election of a constituent assembly that would write a new constitution, is expected to be announced soon.

Under the Government's plan, announced last week, both the House of Deputies and the Senate would be elected by universal suffrage. Royal appointees, a prominent feature of the institutions devised by Franco, would be limited to a fifth of those elected to the Senate during any four-year term.

Opposition Evasive

Because the plan is acknowledged to contain considerable merit, the Government's initiative has caught the opposition off balance and its responses have been evasive and weak. Only the Communist Party has come out in full opposition, largely because the plan calls for the party's exclusion from the elections.

Both the Spanish Socialist Workers Party and one Christian Democratic group, the Popular Democratic Federation, acknowledged that the program could lead to a complete break with the political system that Franco built. But they, like other opposition groups, made clear their doubts about the Government's democratic intentions. The rejection of the plan by all these groups in based on the following objections, among others:

¶There is no guarantee of fair elections and of Government neutrality.

¶Two-thirds majorities are required in each house to make changes in the so-called fundamental laws. With the prospect of a strong rightist presence in each house, that kind of majority may be an insuperable obstacle.

¶Concessions to regional demands in Catalonia, the Basque country and elsewhere are put off until the new parliament is elected and a new government is formed. But neither the Catalonians nor the Basques want to wait without assurances of concessions.

The details of the alternative plan are not yet known, but its main feature is understood be the call for the election of an assembly committed in advance to writing a new constitution. This could bypass Francoist institutions.

Yugoslavia Jails Journalist

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia, Sept. 17 (AP)—The district court of Ljubljana sentenced Viktor Blazic, a journalist, to two years in jail for hostile propaganda, the official Yugoslav news agency Tanyug reported today. The court ruled that Mr. Blazic had "maliciously and falsely presented the social-political situation in the country and in particular foreign policy relations," Tanyug said.

Panama's Charge of Role by U.S. In Riots Reflects Delay on Treaty

By ALAN RIDING
Special to The New York Times

PANAMA, Sept. 8—Panama's attempt to blame the United States for recent student riots over food prices was seen today as a reflection of the problems being caused here by delays in the conclusion of a treaty with Washington over clusion of a treaty with Washington over use of the Panama Canal.

Although foreign diplomats dismissed the charge that the United States was trying to "destabilize" Panama, they and others expressed the belief that the left-leaning military Government was stirring anti-American sentiment to divert attention from this country's economic situation.

In recent months, leftist student organizations and small opposition groups have preferred increasingly to campaign about the high level of unemployment and rise in food prices rather than agitate about a new canal treaty to replace the one, in effect since 1903, that allowh the United States to operate the canal in perpetuity.

Government Cools Down

The Government of Gen. Omar Torrijos Herrera, on the other hand, had noticeably cooled down on the canal issue, apparently aware that little substantive progress could be made during the American Presidential campaign.

In January, to discourage further public debate on the proposed treaty to replace the 1903 accord, General Torrijos deported a dozen outspoken critics of the Governments' handling of negotiations and effectively silenced discussion of the problem in the press and broadast media.

But Panama's economy, affected severely by the slump in world trade and an infromal investment boycott organized by the Panamanian private sector, continued to slide this year as the Government and businessmen awaited the inflow of money that a new canal treaty should bring.

Seeking to Defuse Tensions

More recently, with the Government already overextended in borrowing abroad, economic activity here stagnant and popular resentment growing, there was speculation that General Torrijos could not sustain his delicate balancing-act indefinitely. This provoked wild rumors of attempted coups, of gunbattles in the National Guard headquarters and of the disappearance of key members of the military hierarchy.

According to diplomatic sources the general, anxious to defuse local tensions, therefore turned once more to the canal issue in the hope that visible progress could be made following President Ford's defeat of Ronald Reagan—a strong opponent of a new canal treaty—for the Republican Presidential nomination.

But when no word came from Washington on a date for the resumption of the talks, General Torrijos this month instructed his Foreign Minister, Aquilino Boyd, and his Ambassador in Washington, Nicolas Gonzalez Revilla, to press the Ford Administration to show willingness to negotiate.

As the Pressures Built Up

"With nothing happening on the talks," a Panamanian lawyer said, "with the population worried by the economy, with the general displaying none of his old flair for leadership, with tensions growing between leftists and the pro-Governemnt student groups, with the private sector generally unhappy with the regime—well, something had to happen."

The intensity of anti-Government feeling displayed in the riots against increases in the prices of rice and milk was evidently unexpected and left the regime with the choice of repressing th leftist students, whose support it had always claimed to enjoy, or of finding an alternative scapegoat.

Until Friday, though, the Government had made no suggestion that the United States was responsible, saying instead that criminal elements had infiltrated the student ranks and were responsible for the stoning of buildings, looting of shops and burning of cars in the downtown area.

The 'American Agents'

Then, in the Government-controlled press' yesterday, a long statement was published, charging that "American intelligence agencies were responsible for the unrest" and that three Army Intelligence Agents had been arrested while they wereparticipating in th e di sturbances.

At noon, United States Ambassador William J. Jorden was called in by Foreign Minister Boyd to receive a formal protest note that accused the United States armed forces of following a "destabilization plan" t o b ring chaos to Panama.

United States o fficials disclosed today that o nl y one of the three "agents"—Pfc. Bernard Lowell Jameson—is an American citizen. The other two detainees are Panamanians. Rogelio Garcia is a Costa Rican-born, naturalized Panamanian who works as a warehouseman in Howard Air Force Base in the Canal Zone, and Hector Downs is the unemployed stepson of a Panamanian employee of the Canal Zone who was carrying an expired United States identity card.

The officials also noted that five other American servicemen currently held by the Panamanian National Guard were facing charges that were not related to the disturbances.

Today the Panamanian press seemed to be trying to keep from adding to tensions by playing down the Government's statement and, unexpectedly, giving prominence to the United States denials. There were also no signs of new student unrest, although weekends are traditionally quiet here.

F.B.I. BEGAN INQUIRY OF CARSWELL IN '70

Agents Apparenty Failed to Tell Nixon Aides About Family Ties to a Teacher Later Slain

By JOHN M. CREWDSON
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18—The Federal Bureau of Investigation apparently failed to pass on to Nixon Administration officials information about the family connections of former Federal Judge G. Harrold Carswell that might have raised questions about his nomination for a seat on the Supreme Court.

The information, much of it circumstantial or based on rumor, was produced in an investigation begun on the bureau's own initiative shortly after Judge Carswell's nomination to the high court was announced on Jan. 19, 1970, according to a number of well-placed sources.

The information concerned a link between the Carswell family and John Pack, a homosexual high school teacher who was found slain two weeks after the nomination was announced.

Law enforcement sources in Florida said the information was brought to the F.B.I.'s attention well before the Senate debate on the nomination of Mr. Carswell, then a Federal Appeals Court judge.

But former high officials in the Nixon Administration who had been responsible for overseeing the nomination process said the information had not been reported to them.

Indicted Last June

Mr. Carswell, who retired from the Federal bench in 1970 after the Senate narrowly rejected his nomination, was indicted in Tallahassee last June on a charge of having made a homosexual approach to a vice-squad officer in the mens' room of a shopping mall there. Mr. Carswell has denied any wrongdoing in that case, and disposition of the case is still pending.

John W. Dean 3d, the former White House counsel who, as a Justice Department official in 1970, was involved with the Carswell nomination, said in a recent telephone interview that the publicity arising from Mr. Carswell's recent arrest was the first indication he had had that the former judge might have been a homosexual.

Mr. Dean also said he did not know why the F.B.I. had investigated Mr. Carswell on that occasion at all, since the White House had not asked for a background check on the judge prior to his Supreme Court nomination.

The reason, he said, was that the bureau had conducted an extensive examination of Mr. Carswell's background less than a year before, when he was appointed to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, and that "no fresh input" was deemed necessary.

File Called 'Up to Date'

Egil Krogh Jr., then the White House official in charge of the Supreme Court selection process, said that he, too, had seen nothing suggesting anything abnormal in the F.B.I. file compiled earlier on Mr. Carswell, which he said had been presented to him as "up to date."

Nonetheless, sources interviewed by The New York Times during a month-long inquiry said that, after the announcement of Mr. Carswell's nomination, the F.B.I.'s Tallahassee office was instructed by bureau headquarters to assemble all available information on the judge's background.

That investigation amounted to little more than the checking of newspaper files, the sources said, until Feb. 1, 1970, when John Pack's body was found in his Tallahassee apartment by deputies of the Leon County Sheriff's Department. Mr. Pack had been shot three times with a .45-caliber pistol.

Larry Campbell, the deputy who first searched the Pack apartment, said that among the items he found there was a photograph of the teacher taken in front of a North Tallahassee house he had rented the previous summer. The house was adjacent to the Carswell residence.

Also in the apartment, Mr. Campbell said were "letters and things of that nature" that made it apparent to him that Mr. Pack had been a homosexual. Mr. Campbell later testified to that fact.

Within a week of the murder, he said, officials in the Sheriff's Department discovered that a watch, apparently stolen from Mr. Pack's body by the person who killed him, had been obtained for the teacher by Scott Carswell, one of the judge's sons, who had been a student at the high school where Mr. Pack taught.

Mr. Carswell's attorney, who asked not to be identified, said he did not wish to comment on whether the former judge had ever known Mr. Pack, or any other aspect of the story.

When he first talked to The Times, Mr. Campbell said that he recalled having told Robert Clark, then head of the F.B.I.'s Tallahassee office, about the tenuous connections between Mr. Pack and the Carswell family, as well as a "rumor around town" that Mr. Carswell had been involved in a homosexual incident some years earlier.

Half of Town's Residents Ordained To Qualify for Tax-Exempt Status

tax burden must be borne by the long-time residents of the town.

The supervisor of Hardenburg, Lester Bourke, a reflective, pipe-smoking man, joined Mr. Crary at a table in the diner. He talked about the town's financial problems and the ordination movement, which he had encouraged, to fight the present property tax laws.

Like many other communities in the Catskill area, Mr. Bourke said, more and more of the land in Hardenburgh is being bought by religious and educational organizations and thereby removed from the tax rolls.

The Ulster County town comprises 54,000 acres of woods, rivers and farmland divided from east to west by a mountain range. The Dai Bosatsu Zendo, a huge, white stucco and dark wood structure in Japanese design, was recently built overlooking a lake in the center of more than 1,000 acres of wild woodland owned by Zen Buddhists.

The Nassau County Boy Scouts own 1,800 acres which, Mr. Bourke said, are seldom used. The Catskill Center for Conservation and Development owns 3,600 acres and a group of Tibetan monks have just taken over an old mansion on more than 300 acres.

All are tax exempt, and the burden of supporting the schools as well as the meager town and county services, falls upon the residents, who earn an average income, Mr. Bourke said, of $6,000 to $7,000 a year. Most are subsistence farmers, loggers, or have jobs outside of town.

School Costs Are High

The total assessed value of property in Hardenburgh is $21 million, and $5 million of that is tax-exempt. But almost all of the tax-exempt land is in the southern half of the town, Mr. Bourke said.

Children in that section attend schools in Livingston Manor. Last year, only 25 Hardenburgh children used that school, but taxes paid to the Livingston Manor district in 1975 grew to $134,250. That amount equals $5,370 for each student.

Mr. Bourke owns 192 acres of woods and fields that were handed down by his grandfather and father. He lives there with his wife and 15-month-old son, and runs a machine shop in a building next to his house.

In 1970, he paid school taxes of $450 and town and county taxes of $350. He had just received this year's school tax bill for $2,000, and expects his town and county taxes to double that amount.

"And my money," said Mr. Bourke, who is a Roman Catholic, "went to support the Zen studies, and the Tibetans. Maybe I would rather contribute it to my own church."

The town has no business section, no stores, and nochurch es. Few residents are churchgoers, and those who are attend services in neighboring communities, Mr. Bourke said.

A drive through thee town takes one along narow, winding roads, some with rutted dirt surfaces, passing forest land, a river a few fields planted with corn and pastures dotted with grazing cows.

Several miles before the road that lea s to the Zendo, there is a dairy farm owned by Bob Barnhart on 330 acres that were cleared by his grandfather almost 100 years ago.

In his neat but sparsely furnished living room, Mr. Barnhart, a gaunt, sandy-haired man, puffed on a pipe and leafed through his ledger. He noted that, in 1971, he had paid a school tax of $519. His bill for this year, which he pulled out of a pile of papers in the kitchen, was for $1,611, with the town and county bills still to come. Two-thirds of his income, he estimated, will be owed in property taxes this year.

Mr. Barnhart was among those who were ordained last Monday. "There's an old saying, 'If you can't beat 'em, join 'em,'" he said. "Don't get me wrong. I have nothing against paying taxes. I don't mind paying my fair share, but as far as being forced to support others, charity should come from the heart, not be forced into it. I respect everybody's religion, but if that's what they want, that's what they believe, let them pay for it."

Before resorting to ordination, the residents had tried other methods, Mr. Sourke said. A petition to a mend the tax law was sent to Governor Carey's office in April but Mr. Burke sai, "it probably went into the circular file somewhere."

Then, in September, there was a meeting wirh lawyers for the State Board of Equalization and Assessment, "all wearing white suits," Mr. Bourke recalled. The lawyers had said it would be two or three years before the law could be changed.

The Ulster County Board of Legislators recently passed a resolution asking the state Legislature to amend the property tax law so that tax exemptions for religious or educational organizations would be limited to one building and five acres. But residents are not hopeful about the outcome.

So when Mr. Crary read in the paper about Bishop George McClain in Liberty, who could ordain ordinary people, it made a lot of sense to him. He drove up and had it done, he said. "Then I suggested to Lester that we have a mass ordination. The question came up as to the ethics of doing it, but I question the ethics, for instance of the conservation center that's taken all that land."

Flyers were sent to Bardenburgh residents, and the proposal was publicized on the radio and in a lo cal newspaper. About 300 people showed up at the Community Hall, 150 from Hardenburgh, and the rest from nearby towns like Livingston Manor and Rascoe.

Bishop McLain, who conducted the ceremony, in a Roman collar and wearing a large cross that bounced against his ample stomach, explained that members of the Universal Life Church could believe in what they thought was right, as long as they did not infringe on the rights of others. "Then," said Mr. Crary.

THE BLIND TAUGHT ART OF SELF-DEFENSE

Policeman Who Taught Thousands Emphasizes Preventive Tactics and Turning Handicap to Use

Dark city streets and empty subway cars may be a frightening prospect for the average New Yorker, but for the blind the possibility of unexpected attack looms even larger.

Yesterday at the Ne wYork Association for the Blind, Police Officer Liddon Griffith, who has taught self-defense tactics to thousands of elderly people in the last two years, conducted a seminar for the blind in yhich he emphasized "preventive self-defense" and "turning the handicap of being blind into a plus."

Officer Griffith picked up his expertise from talking to muggers on the street and in jail, including one who said he had committed 200 muggings, and from questioning crime victims in hospitals. He has five documented cases in which elderly people have saved their lives through means learned in his class.

Yesterday's course, attended by 30 blind persons and a handful of seeing-eye dogs, was inspired by Officer Griffith's grandfather, who was 83 and partly blind when he was mugged four years ago, and who then asked the police officer why he had never taught him self-defense.

'Use Element of Surprise'

"It's in your favor to say, 'Mr. Mugger, I'm blind and can't identify you," said Officer Griffith, "which increases the chance he won't harm you." He also advised the blind to use their highly developed sense of touch to break out of wrist grips or other holds an attacker might use.

A mugger often relies on "putting the fear of God into you," Officer Griffith warned, and may use obscenities and ethnic slurs to get a victim off his guard. "But use the element of surprise," the police officer said. "Just as you don't know how the mugger will react, he doesn't know how you will defend yourself."

Pete Shivers, a 47-year-old former mugger who worked with Officer Griffith during the seminar, said that muggers looked for people with money, and that such people usually showed they have money.

"You notice that people who have a lot of money on them like to touch or pat it as they walk along," he said. "And they're constantly looking around. Women tend to clutch their handbags a little tighter if they're carrying money."

2 Vulnerable Areas

In defense against attacks by a man, Officer Griffith said, a mugger's two most vulnerabl areas are the eyes and the groin. "Some of you who are blind may be squeamish about attacking someone in the eyes," he said. "But this is a matter of life and death."

Officer Griffith advised giving in to a mugger armed with a knife.

"If some guy has a knife at your throat, don't scream," he said. "You might panic him. And if he says to take off your pants, guess what? You take them off fast, very fast."

One woman attending the course, who had been raped two times, said that unless an attacker had a lethal weapon, the victim should not give in. She added:

"The best way to confront a rapist is not to be afraid, to stand up to him. I avoided getting raped a third time that way."

The woman, who is partly blind, said she takes the same precautions sighted people might, such as not going out after dark and staying away from dangerous neighborhoods.

Albert Jorwa, who is legally blind, defended himself five years ago against three muggers in Paterson, N. J., by using techniques he had learned in a karate class. Not able to see his attackers, Mr. Jorwa received a knife wound before escaping. "I took karate to protect myself because I can't depend on the police to guard me, the way things are now," he said.

Although Officer Griffith demonstrated self-defense methods, his ultimate rule for fighting crime had little to do with tactics or criminal psychology.

"My solution to combating crime," he said, "is to look out for one another."

National Forests Clear-Cutting Approved by House, 305 to 24

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18 (UPI) — The House has approved a bill to allow some "clear-cutting" of timber in national forests.

The bill would set guidelines for commercial cutting and replanting of young trees or seeds in the 187-million acre national forest system.

After passing the bill, 305 to 24, the House sent it to conference to be reconciled with Senate-passed legislation.

The bill would allow "clear-cutting," which is a method of stripping all timber in an area of the forest. Environmentalists won a Federal court decision in August 1975 that restricted clear-cutting.

The court ruling turned on an 1897 law that required timber sold from national forests to be "dead, matured or large" and individually marked before cutting.

700 Take U.S. Oath In Boston Ceremony

BOSTON, Sept. 18 (AP)—Standing beneath portraits of John Adams, John Quincy Adams and John Hancock, 700 immigrants became American citizens yesterday in the final Bicentennial program of the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service.

"I'm on cloud nine. This is one of the most important days of my life," said Sylvia Jacobson of Newton, who took the oath with her husband, Jacob.

The mass oath was administered in Faneuil Hall by the United States District Court chief judge, Andrew A. Caffrey.

Officials said it was the largest naturalization ceremony ever in Massachusetts.

Similar services were held this year aboard the U.S.S. Constitution, at Old North Church and at the Old First Church in Springfield.

The police said that when they found the burglar they would charge him with both burglary and homicide. He fled with $200 in cash and a substantial amount of jewelry.

The death of the elderly woman, who like her sister, was a retired schoolteacher, was the main topic of conversation yesterday at the 2,495-unit development, which spreads from 20th to 23d Street, between the East River and First Avenue.

'Need Door Guards'

Many of the residents said that, while the grounds of the development were well-kept, there was a ned for more police protection.

"You never see a policeman here," said SCamuel Gardner, a second-floor resident of 8 Peter Cooper Road. "We also need door guards to make sure no one gets into the buildings."

He pointed to a lone guard, unarmed, who was patrolling the walk between several buildings. "What can he do if there is real trouble?" Mr. Gardner asked.

Aside from the guards, who are provided by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company—which owns the housing project the only other protection is provided by an electronic system.

To gain entrance to a building, a visitor has to dial by telephone the partment he is seeking. The tenant activiates the lobby door by dialing a number in response.

'Few People Venture Out'

Mrs. Paul Meehan, a tenant of the adjoining building at 510 East 10th Street, station house said yesterday that, compared with other areas, crime was minimal at Peter Cooper Village.

But residents of the project insist that there has been an increase in burglaries, muggings and other crimes at Peter Cooper Village. A tenants' committee met last week with Metropolitan Life officials. The company repersentative said that it would add more maintenance men to its security force and that the guards would follow suspicious-looking persons more closely.

The project was built 30 years ago.

Japanese Admit 31 From Vietnam Who Spent 64 Days on Freighter

KITAKYUSHU, Japan, Sept. 17 (AP)—Thirty-one Vietnamese refugees, confined for 64 days on a Panamanian freighter that had rescued them from the South China Sea, were allowed to disembark in Japan today, immigration officials said.

The Vietnamese, who hope to go to the United States, traveled 16,000 miles on the 16,055-ton Cape Erimo after the authorities at earlier ports of call refused them permission to land. They came ashore at Kitakyushu, on the northern tip of Kyushu, Japan's southernmost main island, with permission to stay for 30 days. Japan does not usually give refugees permanent asylum.

Regents' Chancellor Says Suburban Education Falls Prey to 'Outside Forces'

Special to The New York Times

GARDEN CITY, L.I., Sept. 18—Theodore M. Black, the Chancellor of the Board of Regents of the State of New York, told a group of educators today that suburban education was at the mercy of "unpredictable and uncontrollable outside forces and external decisions."

"Who could have told us two years ago that by 1976 major decisions effecting public schools and colleges of New York would be made not by educators, legislators or city administrators, but by a small group of cold-eyed financial experts?" Dr. Black asked.

Picturing New York City and the state as in the "economics of decline," Mr. Black castigated "the profligate past of the City of New York," which he said drove the world's greatest metropolis to the brink of bankruptcy. He noted that the domino effect reached up to the state itself, adding millions of dollars in higher rates to already heavily tax-burdened New Yorkers.

Politicians Are Denounced

As the keynote speaker at the day-long conference sponsored by Adelphi University's Institute for Suburban Studies, Dr. Black denounced the politicians who, he said, 10 years ago fought for the honor of having done the most for the school system. Today, the Chancellor said, they are all vying to determine who can denounce most fiercely the same schools as "ungovernable, wasteful education mills producing illiterate amoral generations."

Acknowledging both the changed economic circumstances of the 70's and the culpability of education, Dr. Black said that a combination of the economic squeeze and the growing dissatisfaction by the public with an educational product many taxpayers felt to be inferior helped hasten record budget defeats in 1976.

"The school system is accountable," he said, adding "the American people are not accustomed to buying things they don't get."

Characterizing New Yorkers and "especially Long Islanders" as people wanting the best and most of everything in the way of public services, Dr. Black urged his audience to face the fact that this desire had aided in pushing all taxes to record levels.

"Our state and our region have the dubious honor of leading everyone in terms of state-local tax levies," he noted.

U.S. SAYS APACHE RESORT HAS RIGHT TO SELL LIQUOR

Special to The New York Times

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M., Sept. 18—The United States Attorney's office filed a brief in Federal District Court here this week stating that the Mescalero Apache Tribe has the right to sell alcoholic beverages at the new 140-unit resort and recreation center in the southern New Mexico Mountains without having to acquire a state liquor license.

The state of New Mexico and the 2,500-member Indian tribe have been involved in a legal controversy ever since the tribal officials challenged the license refusal authority of Carlos Jaramillo, director of the State Alcoholic Beverage Control Department.

Mr. Jaramillo denied the tribe's application to transfer a tribally owned liquor license from the Apache Summit restaurant to the Inn of the Mountain Gods, both on the Mescalero Apache Reservation. He said his denial was in accordance with a state law that prohibits the transfer of a license to within a five-mile "buffer zone" surrounding incorporated communities. The new inn is less than four miles from the village of Ruidoso. The Apache Summit restaurant is outside the five-mile zone.

The tribe started selling liquor without a state license shortly after the $15 million resort opened in July 1975 on the sprawling, 719-square-mile reservation, and liquor has continued to be served at the inn without a license under the terms of a preliminary injunction.

SHIFT OF SPACE CENTER SCORED IN NASA STUDY

HOUSTON, Sept. 18 (AP)—A study presented to a Congressional subcommittee says that relocation of crew training and mission control functions from the Johnson Space Center in Texas to Cape Canaveral in Florida could cost as much as $842 million.

Representative Don Fuqua, a Florida Democrat who is a member of the House Committee on Space, Science and Technology's subcommittee on manned space flights, requested last June that the National Aeronautics and Space Administration conduct the study.

The agency's report said that "no management, technical or budgetary advantages" would be realized in such moves. It said the moves could cause a two-year delay in the space shuttle program.

"The relocation would seriously affect a smoothly functioning, highly efficient organization at the Lyndon B. Johnson Space Center and would cause either an unacceptable schedule gap in the space shuttle program or require duplicate facilities and personnel to eliminate the gap," the report said.

The study estimated that relocation of crew training and the control center would cost $722.2 million in 1980 or $842.8 million in 1983.

It said that moving the crew training only would cost $412.5 million in 1980 and $487.1 million in 1983. Relocating only the control center would cost $573.7 in 1980 and $688.7 in 1983, it said.

The report added that these funds would not be recoverable.

Mr. Scoppeta, who is also the city's Investigation Commissioner, emphasized that aspects of the plan still had to be approved by Mr. Morgenthau, Mr. Gold and Justice Ross.

At yesterday's meeting in Police Headquarters, police officials told First Deputy Mayor John E. Zuccotti that unless the plan was soon implemented overtime costs for police on courtroom work would reach $8 million this year, double the expected cost.

"We have to solve this problem fast," Mr. Zuccotti said sharply.

Aspects of the controversial plan were discussed at a management-review meeting of police and city officials in the office of Police Commissioner Michael J. Codd.

Police officials also provided details about problems other than arraignment:

¶Antiprostitution patrols were sharply cut in midtown shortly after the Democratic National Convention ended last July. Prostitution arrests in August dropped to 289, compared with 555 in July. The number of prostitutes sentenced to jail terms also decreased to 13 percent of those convicted in August, compared with 22 per cent in July. The decrease was an apparent indication that judges were less harsh with prostitutes after an acknowledged city campaign to "sanitize" the Times Square area before and during the convention.

¶Average response time to calls made to 911, the police emergency telephone number, improved after complaints of inadequate service. Officials reported that by adding more telephone operators, 94 percent of all calls were now being answered within 30 seconds. Last month, only 84 percent of the calls were picked up within 30 seconds. But officials stressed that 60 percent of all calls made to 911 were for nonemergencies, thereby impeding proper service.

¶No more police layoffs are expected in the 25,000-member force for the rest of the fiscal year, which ends June 30th. More than 2,000 officers were dismissed for economy reasons last year.

The proposed prearraignment system would put a virtual end to the unauthorized practice of "convenience arrests." These arrests," occur when officers deliberately make arrsets near the end of their work tours to obtain overtime pay.

The monthly management review meetings between city and police officials had previously been closed to reporters. It was uncertain if future meetings would be open to the press.

Wydler Urging Ford to Order Review of Medicaid-Medicare

Special to The New York Times

MINEOLA, L. I., Sept. 17—Representative John W. Wydler, Republican of Nassau County, said today he would introduce Monday a resolution calling on President Ford to initiate, through an executive order, an immediate review of the operations of the Medicaid-Medicare programs.

The resolution will ask for the establishment of a strike force for Medicare and Medicaid review composed of investigators and auditors from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, the Internal Revenue Service, the Department of Justice and the Office of Management and Budget.

Mr. Wydler is the senior Republican on the House subcommittee with responsibilities for oversight review of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. His committee has been holding hearings on an estimated loss of $4-5 billion annually through fraud and abuse in the health programs.

Southern Baptists and Catholics Find Ties

By KENNETH A. BRIGGS

Every third Thursday, the Rev. C. Brownlow Hastings and six other Southern Baptist ministers drive a few miles from downtown Atlanta to a secluded Trappist monastery. There, with three Roman Catholic monks, they spend the day reading the New Testament in Greek.

For three years, since the first such session, the monthly routine has been what Dr. Hastings, a church official, calls "one of my most satisfying experiences."

It also represents the kind of easy communication between members of the two powerful religious groups that was virtually unknown a decade ago.

History of Antipathy

A heavy overlay of distrust and antipathy has, in fact, darkened relations between them for most of the nation's history. Significantly, the legacy of this feuding has been injected into the current Presidential campaign, particularly in terms of the impact of Jimmy Carter's Southern Baptist identity among Roman Catholics. Recent polls have found concern by Catholic voters about the religion of Mr. Carter, the Democratic candidate.

Much of the consequent discussion has centered on the images each religious group has held of the other. Despite efforts to erase the past, the negative notions die hard.

Baptists and Catholics, usually isolated from one another, have viewed each other across a solid barrier of disagreement, confusion and animosity.

To a Catholic, the Baptist was often portrayed as a fanatical follower of a superficial, revivalistic faith who has strayed from the historic church. Moreover, the stereotype was of a straightlaced moralizer for whom the Bible was almost an object of worship.

Another Stereotype

Many Baptists, on the other hand, were reared to regard Catholics as puppets of the Pope for whom personal faith in Jesus Christ counted less than reliance on church formulas for salvation. Furthermore, Catholic belief in the intercessory role of the Virgin Mary and the saints often looked like idolatry to Baptists.

Meanwhile, each church proudly held itself up as the true way. Generally, neither Baptist nor Catholic could imagine being the other.

Though these impressions remain, especially in Baptist rural areas and Catholic urban areas, the ecumenical age, among other things, is bringing about a transformation of attitudes.

Baptists and Catholics are now going on spiritual retreats together, working on joint projects in such areas as evangelism, examining differences on issues like abortion and the meaning of conversion, and, perhaps most importantly, just getting to know one another.

'Brothers and Sisters'

"We are movingly encountering each other as brothers and sisters in Christ," says Bishop Bernard F. Law of the Springfield-Cape Girardeau, Mo., diocese, who was a priest for many years in Mississippi. "We simply were not able to do that previously."

According to Bishop Law, who has attended several regional conferences sponsored by the two churches in recent years, certain stereotypes begin to crumble as lay people and clergymen exorcise the demons of the past.

Southern Baptists often say they come away surprised by the Catholic commitment to Bible reading, prayer and personal faith in Jesus Christ, hallmarks of Baptist tradition.

Catholics report being amazed to find Baptists who do not believe that being "saved" implies spiritual development ends there but rather, as one priest put it, "that there is need for continual forgiveness and growth," a sound Catholic concept.

"Catholics are learning that the term 'born again' doesn't have to be an expression of arrogance," a Catholic observer says. "It doesn't necessarily mean the person thinks everything is just fine and that he thinks he's got a place staked out in heaven."

Factors in Change

Several factors have made these first steps possible. The Second Vatican Council's emphasis on interchurch relations and its declaration on religious liberty was a major development. Another has been the gradual openness of Southern Baptists toward relations with other churches.

"Ecumenism itself is still a dirty word in some places in the church," says Dr. Claude Broach, director of the Catholic-Baptist Ecumenical Institute in Winston Salem, N.C., "primarily because it implied a move to homogenize all Christians into one."

But leaders of the Southern Baptist Convention have been able to convince many of their co-religionists that conversations could be held with other churches without risking theological compromise.

"We have been able to develop unity," says Dr. Hastings, who has become the Southern Baptist observer at most large Catholic gatherings, including the Synod of Bishops in Rome, without having to resolve all the doctrinal differences that have come down over the years."

Wide Differences

In practice, the churches are poles apart. For example, Catholicism works within a highly complex hierarchy, while among Baptists each church is autonomous. Baptists treat baptism as an initiation for those old enough to "believe," while Catholics baptize new born infants.

The greatest differences arise over their respective concepts on the meaning of salvation. This issue, perhaps more than another other, has led to the deepest levels of suspicion.

In the main, Baptists understand salvation as an initial conversion or "born again" experience in which the person feels a commitment to Christ. "In our evangelical tradition," Dr. Broach explains, "it simply signifies your personal decision to be a Christian."

While some say the moment was a dramatic, even supernatural, experience, most, including Jimmy Carter, describe it as an outwardly unspectacular but inwardly peaceful sense of resolve. At that time, according to Baptist thinking, God confers forgiveness and grace.

Stress on Sacraments

Catholics, by comparison, hold that the sacraments are the vehicles of grace and that the baptized infant has already received the fruits of salvation that are strengthened over the years through continued participation in the sacraments.

Do Catholics have something akin to conversion experiences? Participants in the Catholic-Baptist dialogues conclude that many do, though not in "conversion" terms Baptists would find familiar.

At a recent dialogue in California, for instance, a bishop outlined his confirmation and decision to become a priest in a way that reminded Baptists of their own moments of decision.

The two traditions disagree sharply on a number of issues, among them abortion and aid to private schools. As perhaps the nation's staunchest defender of church-state separation, Southern Baptists vigorously oppose Government support of private schools. On abortion, though Southern Baptists are generally opposed as individuals to the practice they have as a convention refused to back an amendment that would prohibit abortion, mirroring Jimmy Carter's own stated position.

Ambassador to Baptists

The Rev. Will Steinbacher, a Jesuit priest who works with the Glenmary Missioners, a mission agency to the rural South, says that "while Catholics frequently don't talk about their experiences, they've often had them."

Father Steinbacher, in an attempt to create better interfaith understanding, became the official Glenmary ambassador to the Southern Baptist Convention and spent three years traveling throughout five Southern states meeting with church groups, attending worship and listening to problems.

He left this summer, replaced at his Newnan, Ga., residence by another priest with the same mission. He says that he came to respect Southern Baptist integrity and adds that he was received with "warmth and acceptance." Father Steinbacher's initiative is one of many efforts being made to open channels of communication between groups.

The Ecumenical Institute, a joint program of Wake Forest University in Winston-Salem and Belmont Abbey, a nearby Catholic college, has brought scholars, clergymen and the laity to yearly conferences since 1969.

Ministerial associations in most Southern communities now include Catholic priests.

So far, the dialogues been aimed at mutual understanding rather than finding theological harmony.

Local Church Efforts

In addition to the more orchestrated regional endeavors, local churches have undertaken interchurch retreats, evangelistic projects and social projects.

One example of cooperation comes from the southern Louisiana town of Jennings. As a result of growing sensitivity and closer ties, the First Baptist Church two years ago sponsored a youth evangelism campaign with the two local Catholic churches and is planning a retreat to help Catholics become more effective law ministers.

The pastor of the First Baptist Church, the Rev. Lawrence Baylot, says that the area is the "heart of antagonism" and that until recently the two groups remained far removed. But, through the ministerial association, "Catholics and Protestants began to share our concerns and found them to be the same," he said. Then we started to pray about it."

Inner Circle of Agreement

"We found an inner circle of things we agree on," Mr. Baylot says. "We all have a firm conviction that Jesus Christ is the answer. We don't discuss things like sacrements. We just put that aside."

These developments are enormously significant to those who lived among a minority of Catholics in an atmosphere that eyed them with hostility.

"If clergy get together it means a lot," says Bishop James D. Niedergese of the Nashville diocese where Catholics number 60,000 in a population of 2.6 million. "We've started getting rid of erroneous ideas."

Bishop Niedergeses grew up in a small Tennessee town and remembers insults hurled at him for being Catholic. He is indictative of many newly appointed bishops who are acutely aware of the need to reach across church lines.

"Catholics don't believe everybody who's non-Catholic will go to hell," he says, citing what he says has been a commonly held assumption. "And we don't worship statues, we use them as visual aids. Things are being understood much better now."

Two States in the Southwest Sue Land Concern Over Sales of Lots

By GRACE LICHTENSTEIN
Special to The New York Times

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M.—About 45 miles south of here sits perhaps the most sprawling subdivision in the sunbelt, the cornerstone of Horizon Corporation, a $40 million Tucson-based land sales company that is currently in trouble with two state governments and the Federal Trade Commission.

The subdivision known as Rio Communities spills over nearly 950,000 acres an area larger than New York's Nassau County. There are homes, two hotels, a country club and about 1,500 residents. However, most of the area is undeveloped—a vast expanse of typical Southwestern desert bordered by the sleepy pueblo of the Manzano Mountains to the east.

According to local realtors, undeveloped land in the vicinity sells for no more than $40 an acre. But a suit filed in August by the New Mexico Attorney General accuses Horizon Corporation of selling single-family-home sites in the subdivision for an average of $6,000 an acre and commercial lots for an average of $24,000 an acre.

The suit argues that most of the property is unimproved grazing land worth less than $200 an acre by any standard. It also says that most of it has no roads or utility lines. There is also a question of whether water would be available to serve some homes. Thus the suit contends, the buyers have been cheated into paying inflated prices.

State Uses a New Tactic

The New Mexico suit, the first ever filed by the state against a land sales company, uses a new tactic aimed at curbing what Attorney General Toney Anaya believes is widespread land swindles. It charges that not only is Horizon violating consumer protection laws but that it is also violating state securities laws.

In Arizona, a similar suit, based only on consumer protection laws, was filed against Horizon last June by Attorney General Bruce Babbitt. Meanwhile, the Federal Trade Commission has also accused the company of carrying out misleading sales practices.

Horizon, the largest subdivider in New Mexico and the largest land company in Arizona, according to state officials, has become the most visible target of investigations among large land sales outfits in the Southwest.

A look at Horizon offers insight into the magnitude of land sales in the region, as well as into the corporation's own side of the story.

Horizon Defends Its Actions

For its part, Horizon has vigorously defended its actions. It is listed on the New York Stock Exchange and puts out detailed annual reports. In a blistering public letter last month after the New Mexico suit was filed, Alfred Lehtonen, the corporation's vice president, charged that Mr. Anaya was trying the case in the newspapers.

"We have been in business in New Mexico for 17 years," the letter said, noting that most "land fraud" is identified with companies that go bankrupt and disappear. "We remain in business, fully obeying all laws and rules," the letter continued. It also said that Horizon contributes to the economy of each state it operates in by providing taxes, jobs, new people and building activity.

A dusty marker designates a road through the subdivision.

It is only recently that New Mexico and Arizona, long centers of land speculation, have attempted to curb misrepresentation. The Federal Government has prosecuted land swindlers in the Southwest, but such prosecutions are effective only against gross criminal fraud, not against certain kinds of unfair sales techniques or misleading advertising, which state officials say are used frequently.

The main Federal law regulating land sales is administered by the Interstate Land Sales Registration office of the Department of Housing and Urban Development. Mr. Lehtonen was administrator of that office for two years before joining Horizon.

Concern's Other Developments

Besides Rio Communities, Horizon owns Arizona Sunsites (47,000 acres southeast of Tucson), Whispering Ranch (19,000 acres near Wickenburg, Ariz.), Paradise Hills (13,000 acres near Albuquerque), Horizon City (87,000 acres east of El Paso), Waterwood (25,000 acres north of Houston) and a 25,000-acre parcel of land in the Adirondack Mountains of New York.

Figures provided by Horizon show that in 1973, the company produced gross revenues of almost $100 million. But in its latest fiscal year, which ended May 31, 1976, that amount dwindled to just under $40 million, with a net loss for the year of more than $6 million.

Sidney Nelson, chairman of the board, said that "negative publicity" was a "very important factor" in the company's poor showing. The company was also adversely affected by a declining market for homes in recent years, he said.

Mr. Nelson acknowledged that in past years many buyers had signed contracts for Horizon land without actually seeing the property. The company has also used free dinners in distant cities, glowing brochures and, on occasion, free trips to the Southwest to attract potential buyers.

Horizon's founder, Joseph Timan, was a New York landlord who became active in Arizona in the late 1950's. In one interview in 1960, he called the Southwest "the new Florida, the new California, only more so."

"Horizon City," near El Paso, was a good example of the company's promotions. In 1960, Mr. Timan said that the then-empty property had a potential population of 1.5 million people. The Horizon speculations in the area set off waves of speculation by other land companies, with one even advertising its property as being in the "suburbs" of Horizon City. At the time, Horizon had sold only one piece of land there itself.

Today, 16 years later, there are 1,500 people in Horizon City, according to the company.

Passengers Shift in Strike at T.W.A.

By The Associated Press

Thousands of weekend travelers shifted to alternate airlines as Trans World Airlines was grounded yesterday by a strike of 12,000 mechanics and ground crew members, whose contract with the airline expired last Oct. 31.

The primary issue in negotiations for a new contract is wages.

Other airlines reported no overcrowding as a result of taking ontheT.W. A. passengers and the struck airline said that it had no reports of any of its passengers being stranded. A spokesman for the airline noted, however, that Saturday was a relatively light travel day and that the full impact of the strike would not be felt until Monday.

Other airlines reported no overcrowding as a result of taking on the T.W.A. passengers and the struck airline said that it had no reports of any of its passengers on regularly scheduled flights being stranded. A spokesman for the airline noted; however, that Saturday was a relatively light travel day and that the full impact of the strike would not be felt until Monday. He was not asked about charter flights.

The strike began at one minute after midnight yesterday with the expiration of a Government-ordered 30-day cooling-off period. Talks in Washington failed to resolve a pay dispute.

A spokesman for the airline in Washington said that he did not expect Federal mediators to call for new negotations before tomorrow at the earliest.

"I don't think we'll be back to work for a while," said Larry Atkins, president of a machinists union local at Columbus, Ohio.

T.W.A. operates an average of 443 flights daily, including 44 overseas flights, and carries an average of 43,000 passengers a day.

A spokesman for the striking International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers said that talks broke off minutes before the Friday night strike deadline.

Who the Strikers Are

The strikers—mechanics, ramp servicemen, dining, commissary, cleaning and teletype personnel—have not had a pay rise since May 31, 1975. Retroactivity of any pay rise to the expiration date of the union's contract last October is reported to be a major issue.

A T.W.A. spokesman said that the current average annual pay of the striking workers is $16,500.

The strikers also are seeking improvements in insurance, retirement and other benefits. T.W.A. was reported by sources close to the negotiations to be demanding a one-year moratorium on wage rises and discontinuance of certain fringe benefits, such as company participation in a dental plan.

JERSEY 'TEA PARTY' PLANNED FOR BYRNE

Politicians and Protesters Gather in Trenton for March on Princeton to Complain About Tax Law

Special to The New York Times

TRENTON, Sept. 18—More than 5,000 people from throughout New Jersey gathered here to stage a protest calling for the repeal of the recently enacted State Income Tax Law.

Following the four-hour rally, protesters began marching to Princeton, the site of Governor Byrne's official residence, where they planned to drop off several thousand tea bags in an attempt to liken their complaints about taxation here to the Boston Tea Party in 1773.

The Bicentennial motif was continued during the afternoon here as Arthur J. Caceglir of Wood-Ridge wso identified himself as a member of the Ad Hoc Committee to Repeal the New Jersey Income Tax, appeared in a town crier's uniform and periodically rang a hand bell while shouting:

"We press for real tax relief and reasonable economies so that we may be pree of the oppressions visited upon us by runaway officialdom."

Tigher Fiscal Control Urged

In successive speeches, half a dozen conservative state legislators suggested tighter fiscal controls over the entire State Government and closer supervision of the public schools, which receive funds from the disputed income tax.

The schools were closed on July 1 under orders from the State Supreme Court, which had ruled that the old method of school-financing was unconstitutional because it relied too heavily on property taxes that discriminated against poorer districts.

The high court said that his method of raising money had violate the constitutional mandate of a "thorough and efficient education for all students."

Within a week, the State Legislature had passed the income tax law by a minimum vote over the protests of many of the lawmakers who spoke here today.

Senator Anthony Imperiale of Newark, an independent declared: "There is no more government of, for or by the people. It's all for the politicians themselves," he said.

'Don't Amend Injustice'

"They should realize what we know all too well today—that you don't amend an injustice, you delete it and eliminate it, Mr. Imperiale said" and that's what must be done with this tax."

Mr. Imperiale also delivered a personal attack on Governor Byrne, who supported the tax. "Brendan Byrne should be arrested for impersonating a Governor," Mr. Imperiale shouted as the crowd began a 30-second round of sustained applause and cheers.

Assemblyman John Dorsey, Republican of Morris County, said that he would introduce a bill to repeal the tax, in an attempt to "give the people the power they deserve." One of two Constitutional amendments that Mr. Dorsey plans to introduce would provide for the recall of public officials by citizens dissatisfied by their performance in office.

Truancy Cases in Busing Protest Expected to Drop in Louisville

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Sept. 18 (UPI)—The number of truancy cases against Louisville area parents who withhold their children from school to protest court-orderd busing will fall far short of last year's total, an official said yesterday.

But nearly 300 busing-related truancy cases from last year have not yet been heard by the courts and that number is absenteeism this year, according to David Espin, an associate superintendent of the Jefferson County school system.

Enrollment in the Louisville-Jefferson County school system has reached more than 99 percent of the 117,000 students officially projected. Mr. Espin said. however, that some busing opponents were continuing their classroom boycott activities. More than 15,000 students are being bused this year for desegregation purposes.

New York Lottery Is Running a Tough Race With Illegal Games

By LENA WILLIAMS

Although the new instant New York State Lottery is an overwhelming success, it is not very popular in communities that still favor longer-established betting games such as "numbers" and the horses.

The long lines of people waiting for lottery tickets in the rest of the city, for instance, are not to be found in Harlem.

"Most black people are going to stick with the numbers because it's a way of life," said Michael Baker, who lives in the Lenox Terrace apartments on 135th Street and was engaged in a game of playground basketball.

"First, you don't have to pay a dollar like you do with the lottery. Second, the runner usually lives in the neighborhood, so you don't have to walk a mile to place your bet. Third, a wager of 25 cents on a three-digit number pays off about $100 on the same day.

Players who win money on the numbers racket, which is illegal, are not known to pay taxes on their winnings.

'You Never Know'

In other parts of the city, however, the $1 lottery ticket—18.9 million were sold in the state in the first week of operation—is the hottest item in own. Madison Avenue businessmen, college sudents and the elderly are spending their extra dollars these days to buy lottery tickets.

"You never know when you could get that winning $5,000 ticket and pay off the furniture bill," said Diane Manage, a clerk-typist who has bought two lottery tickets every day since the game started last Wednesday. "I figure, you can't go wrong with a dollar investment."

Richard Levine, an office manager at 2 Penn Plaza, says he has spent a sizable portion of his last two paychecks buying $5 to $10 worth of lottery tickets.

"One day I'm going to scrape off that gray coating and find three matching $5,000 figures," Mr. Levine said as he rubbed off the coating on one of his tickets to find three matching $2 figures. "I can see me now in a new car."

People who were waiting on long, snake-like lines outside the lottery vendor in front of Pennsylvania Station and at the Port Authority Bus Terminal were asked why they played the lottery.

"Because you know right away if you're a winner."

"It's new and it's different."

"I like to see how my luck is going."

"They can't cheat on this one, like they did on the weekly."

While the reasons varied, the frequency of winners seemed to encourage more people to play than any other factor.

'A Winner Here!'

"When people get a winner or if they even see a winner it encourages them to play," said Louis Cuomo, who operates the lottery stand at Penn Station. "Every now and then I just yell out 'Hey! We just got a winner here!' and before you know it, the line starts building up."

Nevertheless, Alexander and Mary Dougart, who regularly played the old wekly lottery, are skeptical of the new game even though they have bought many tickets.

"What usually happens is you spend $5 on tickets and end up with one $2 winner," Mr. Alexander said. "You're still losing $3, so what's so great about it?"

Mr. Dougart, a 55-year-old Manhattan resident, was disappointed that she couldn't redeem the money for an old lottery ticket from the vendor at the Port Authority Bus Terminal.

Envoy to Yugoslavia Causes Controversy At State Department

By DAVID BINDER
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18—Statements by Lawrence H. Silberman, United States Ambassador to Yugoslavia, on behalf of an American citizen imprisoned in that country have had sharp repercussions inside the State Department, according to Administration officials.

They said Mr. Silberman had demanded the removal of the Department's Yugoslav desk officer, Alan R. Thompson, over the handling of the spy case. Mr. Thompson was transferred last month.

The internal controversy centered on Mr. Silberman's public condemnation of the Yugoslav Government for holding Laszlo Toth, a Colorado engineer with dual Yugoslav and American citizenship, as a spy for more than 11 months.

Supported by White House

The envoy made his criticisms in Yugoslavia on June 7, the day Yugoslavia informed the United States it would soon release Mr. Toth, and again on July 23, the day Mr. Toth was released.

Mr. Silberman was praised in American newspaper editorials for his defense of Mr. Toth and his actions were later supported by the White House and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger.

But inside the Department of State, officials there said, a move was made at a very high level to have him resign or be reprimanded for "undiplomatic behavior."

Mr. Silberman has acknowledged that he was criticized by the "Eastern European section" of the Department.

But other officials said that a reprimand had been under consideration by Deputy Secretary Charles W. Robinson, Deputy Under Secretary for management Lawrence S. Eagleburger and Assistant Secretary for European Affairs Arthur A. Hartman.

It was finally overruled by Mr. Kissinger, who was said to have felt that a reprimand would only provoke Mr. Silberman to carry his case to the public again and possibly become an issue in the Presidential campaign.

Mr. Kissinger was also described as feeling that it would serve no purpose to take action against Mr. Silberman because President Tito assailed Mr. Silberman in an interview with Tanjug, the official news agency, on July 31.

President Tito accused Ambassador Silberman of waging a "campaign" "pressure" against Yugoslavia. Relations between the two countries have been burdened by the mutual accusations, American and Yugoslav officials said.

As a result Mr. Kissinger ordered all department officials directly concerned with the matter not to discuss it with the press. He also sent an advisory message to Mr. Silberman asking him not to provoke new altercations with his host Government, the officials said.

The controversy has also had a philosophical element, the officials added, because it involved Administration attitudes toward the Communist Government in Yugoslavia.

Mr. Silberman, a conservative Republican, has made a point of declaring his distaste for Communist policies and what he deemed anti-American actions by Yugoslavia, they said.

In this regard, they said, he has earned a certain amount of sympathy from Mr. Kissinger and some of his aides who have viewed some Yugoslav policies—for instance in the Angola crisis last year—as "unhelpful."

Conservative Party, by 140 to 137, Stops Bid to Keep Ford Off Ticket

By GLENN FOWLER

The Conservative Party's state committee, by a margin of only three votes, defeated an attempt to deny President Ford a place on the Conservative line on the ballot in New York State for the November election.

Opponents of the Ford candidacy mustered 137 votes in favor of a motion to leave blank the Presdential column on the Conservative line, placing Senator James L. Buckley at the head of the ticket. A total of 140 committee members—not all of them Ford supporters—voted to nominate a President and Vice President.

There were two abstentions and 32 committee members did not appear at the meeting in the Belmont Hotel, Lexington Avenue and 49th Street.

Later, the committee put Mr. Ford on its ballot. The President received 145 votes. Anthony Di Perna, a state committeeman from Suffolk County who sought the nomination, received 114 votes.

Four years ago, the Conservatives put Richard M. Nixon and Spiro T. Agnew on their ticket but in the preceding two Presidential elections they had left their line blank. President Ford's backers were concerned that failure of the Republican candidate and his running mate, Robert J. Dole, to gain a second line on the ballot could cripple his candidacy in New York.

However, equal concern was expresed in an hour-and-a-half debate among the Conservatives yesterday over the effect of a Ford-Dole endorsement on the Buckley candidacy.

The Contentions

Those arguing for a Ford endorsement contended that failure to back the President would anger Republicans to the point of their refusal to vote for Mr. Buckley. Those favoring a blank Presidential line said that having Ford-Dole electors on it would turn off conservative Democrats who intended to vote for the incumbent Senator but not if he were coupled with Ford and Dole on Row C, the Conservative line on voting machines.

oss and Williams Sharing Same Platform for the First Time in Campaign in Jersey

SWICK, N.J., Sept. 18— on A. Williams Jr. and his onent, David N. Norcross, t joint campaign appears of one-party leadership r to everyone that Congress has not done its job. In fact, Congress has spent most of the 20 years abdicating its responsibilities for dealing with problems by delegating its powers to a vast and pervasive bureauracy," Mr. Norcross said.

An 'Indifferent' Congress

"My opponent, Senator Williams, is a part of the leadership of this indifferent and self-interested Congress. I need accuse him of nothing more and I accuse him of nothing less," he said.

Mr. Norcross, a Moorestown attorney and former head of the State Election Law Enforcement Commission, said Senator Williams's positions on several Congressional committees had led the three-term incumbent to favor the special interests he was charged with regulating.

Mr. Norcross said it was "symbolic of his debt to special interests that he placed George Meany's granddaughter on his committee's payroll. I don't quarrel that she has the qualifications to get a job in Washington. I'm upset with the insensitivity and arrogance of her placement." Mr Meany is the national president off the A.F.L.-C.I.O.

Mr. Norcross again complained that Senator Williams had refused to face him in a direct debate.

Senator Williams, 56, sidestepped the debate question by saying he had just learned that Senator Robert Dole of Kansas, the G.O.P. Vice-Presidential candidate, also was expected to speak at the function.

Debate Slated Next Month

"I've been trying to get at David Norcross for so long," Seantor Williams said, "and I guess we won't be alone this time."

A Williams aide later said Mr. Norcross and Senator Williams, along with three minor Senate candidates, would stage a debate Oct. 12 at WCAU-TV, in Philadelphia. The aide said there were no plans for a debate that could be viewed by North Jersey TV audiences.

In his remarks, Williams listed his accomplishments after 18 years in the Senate, stressing such areas as aid for the handicapped, senior citizens and the educationally deprived.

"When I was elected to the Senate in 1958 I chose to focus in those areas of legislation that dealt with the needs at home. I was concerned with urban affairs, banking and housing, labor and public welfare—areas that deal with the working people of the land," Senator Williams said.

"Out of my efforts, and those of like-minded people, we came up with programs that mean a lot to the people in need of Government support if they are to get a fair shake in this land," he said.

Senator Williams also said, "I've done more to help David Norcross in his money problems than his own party people. I have voted each time except for the first bad bill, in favor of public financing of Senate campaigns, but the bill has always lost in Congress.

"It's people like Bob Dole who have killed the public financing. I am in favor ofboth candidates having equal amounts of money."

The New York Times/Tyrone Dukes

Susan Ford, the President's daughter, holds Bavarian doll she was given during yesterday's Steuben Day parade. She was on the reviewing stand.

Miss Ford Likes Steuben Parade; Sees President Doing Well Here

Susan Elizabeth Ford came to New York City yesterday to campaign for her father and wound up starring in the 19th annual Steuben Day Parade on Fifth Avenue.

"I have always loved parades," Miss Ford said, "and this one is especially thrilling."

From her seat on the reviewing stand at 69th Street, she waved to the thousands of marchers, many of whom not only waved back but paused to record her presence with their cameras. And a few marchers even walked up to the stand to seek Miss Ford's autograph, causing momentary stirs among the Secret Service men.

It was her first campaign visit to the city and for nearly an hour before the parade started at 12 noon, Miss Ford moved about on the side streets off Fifth Avenue and mixed with the marchers as they assembled for the event.

"You don't really get to meet people as they march, so I felt I should meet them before they marched," she said. Miss Ford was greeted with smiles, outstretched hands and, sometimes, with kind words for her father, President Ford.

Optimistic on Local Vote

"I think he's going to do very well well in New York," she said later.

Her father's Democratic opponent, Jimmy Carter, had been invited to the event, which is held to honor Maj. Gen. Friedreich von Steuben, who was Gen. George Washington's inspector general. But Mr. Carter could not attend. Several of his campaign volunteers were visible, however, giving out leaflets urging voter support for their candidate.

One of Mr. Carter's prominent local supporters sat next to Miss Ford. He was Mayor Beame.

Applause and Guffaws

"This is a nonpartisan event," the Mayor said, to the applause of those on the bleachers abutting the reviewing stand. "But it's my great pleasure to welcome Suan Ford. We're all here to pay tribute to the Italians—uh, the German-Americans."

The applause gave way to guffaws.

One of those in the audience was Friedel Bastein, a young man who said he was from Hamburg, West Germany.

"Parades such as these only further the stereotypes that Americans hold in their minds about us Germans," he said, pointing toward colorfully costumed dancers who marched to the tunes of Bavarian music.

But Senator James L. Buckley, Republican of New York, and Governor Byrne of New Jersey, said they thought the parade sufficiently representative of German culture.

"It's a delight to be here," Senator Buckley, who is running for re-election, declared. Then he stepped away from the reviewing stand and shook hands with spectators.

A few minutes later, Miss Ford, too, left the reviewing stand to go to her father's New York headquarters at nearby 545 Madison Avenue. There she commended the campaign staff and then took up a position at the sidewalk recruiting table and, in 15 minutes, signed up 15 volunteers.

When Miss Ford returned to the reviewing stand, at about 2 P.M., the parade was still flowing on its route up Fifth Avenue from 63d Street to 86th Street.

"This is fun," she said, beaming a particularly big smile at some children in the parade.

mitted full television coverage of the debate, including the audience.

As planned by the league, the audience will consist of about 200 reporters and 300 persons invited by the league.

From the start of the negotiations earlier this month between the league and representatives of the two Presidential candidates, it had been agreed that TV camera coverage would be limited to the two debaters. League officials emphasized that th is restriction was recommended by both Mr. Ford and Mr. Carter.

The contention of both candidates as well as the league was that "cutaway shots" of audience reaction could have a div ersionary and perhaps distorting effect upon the public impact of a debate that is supposed to center on the views of the two candidates.

From the reaction today of spokesmen for President Ford and Mr. Carter, it did not appear that either candidate would relent in his position in the face of the objections raised by the commercial networks.

At the same time, there was a privately voiced suspicion in both Presidential camps that the networks were posturing, partly out of pique that they were not running the debates, and that ultimately they would be forced, if only by public opinion, to accept the restrictions on TV camera coverage.

Mike Duval, special counsel to President Ford, said the Ford camp was standing firmly behind the original agreement worked out between the league and the two candidates.

"The President," Mr. Duval said, "had only one very strong feeling—that the debates be serious and focus on the substantive positions of the candidates. The format we have agreed on does that."

Jody Powell, press secretary for Mr. Carter, said: "It was everyone's feeling that by introducing an audience you introduce a third principal into the debate, which is totally unpredictable and subject to having an influence far beyond what it ought to be."

Both Mr. Duval and Mr. Powell expressed confidence that next Thursday's debate would take place, no matter what position the commercial networks assumed.

Thursday's debate is the first of three scheduled between the two Presidential candidates. A fourth is planned between the Republican and Democratic Vice-Presidential candidates.

Deterred by Congress

The networks had originally wanted to organize and sponsor the debates themselves, as they had done in the Nixon-Kennedy debates in 1960, but were deterred when Congress refused to repeal Section 315 of the Federal Communications Act. Under that section, the networks contend they would have had to provide equal time to all other announced Presidential candidates, however small their party.

The League of Women Voters volunteered to sponsor and organize the debates as news events, which escape the requirements of section 315—an offer accepted by the two candidates.

In explaining the demands being made by the networks, one highly placed campaign official, who declined to be identified, said, "The idea of having a debate they do not run and control and direct drives them up the wall."

Another concern of the networks, this official acknowledged, is that if they restrict their television coverage, they may be confronted by legal suits contending that the debate was not a bona-fide news event and that equal time should be provided to other Presidential candidates.

Parkway Adds Time For Motorcycle Tests

WOODBRIDGE, N.J., Sept. 17 (AP)—Motorcyclists will have an additional six months to prove their bikes belong on the Garden State Parkway.

The New Jersey Highway Authority, which operates the toll road, voted to extend a one-year trial period for motorcycles until April 30, 1976.

The authority said the extension would allow commissioners to review safety statistics compiled for the experiment, which began last November.

A state police report said there had been 28 accidents on the Parkway involving motorcycles. There were 29 injuries, none serious, and no fatalities, he report said.

The study said 480 summonses had been issued to motocycle drivers, including 82 speeding tickets. However, no motorcyclists were charged with drunken driving.

California Typifies Lack of Interest Shown Over Nation in the Campa

By R. W. APPLE Jr.

Special to The New York Times

SAN DIEGO, Sept. 18—"Local Democrats received assurances last night," The San Diego Union reported this week, "that the drive to elect Jimmy Carter is finally getting under way in San Diego."

"As they used to say about St. Louis baseball teams," said Paul Haerle, the Republican chairman in California, "I don't see how either of them can possibly win this thing."

"The enthusiasm for Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter in this state," commented Joseph Cerell, a Democratic campaign consultant in Los Angeles, "ranges between none and little."

Nine weeks after the Democratic convention and four weeks after the Republican convention, California, whose 45 electoral votes make it the richest prize in the Presidential campaign, seems a political vacuum. Neither the political professionals nor the voters nor the election analysts communicate the slightest enthusiasm about the race.

In part, the extraordinary lack of movement and drama in California arises from circumstances peculiar to this state. But there is a curious sense of ennui across the nation, wholly different from the excitement of Mr. Carter's rise from abscurity to the Democratic nomination and the President's desperate struggle to hold off Ronald Reagan.

Waiting for the Debates

It is almost as if the electorate has made a collective decision to pay little attention to the campaign until it has a chance to watch the first of the televised debates next Thursday, and as if the candidates and their staffs, in that situation, can make but little impact.

California is surely worth all the exertion either nominee cares to make. No Republican in modern times has been elected President without carrying this vast and heterogeneous state, and only John F. Kennedy, among Democrats, has been elected President without California since World War II.

Although early polls by Mervin Field and Dorothy Corey indicated that Mr. Carter held a substantial lead statewide, local soundings since then suggest that the contest is now very nearly even.

Neither Mr. Ford nor Mr. Carter has a ready-made constituency here, in that both were badly beaten by favorite-son candidates in the primary on June 8—Mr. Ford by former Governor Reagan and Mr. Carter by Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr.

Joseph Scott, the editor of The Political Animal, a newsletter on California politics, calls the lackluster general election contest "the runner-up bowl."

For each side, a pressing early problem was enlisting the enthusiastic support of a defeated rival.

The Reagan supporters have swung behind Mr. Ford with more alacrity than might have been predicted. More than half of the members of the President's California steering committee, announced this week, are erstwhile Reagan partisans. Robert Nesen, a Cadillac dealer from Thousand Oaks who headed the Reagan campaign here, is now the co-chairman of the Ford effort in California.

But it remains to be seen how hard the key Reagan operatives will work to elect Mr. Ford, whom many of them derided as a lightweight during the long pre-convention battle.

"Obviously, you don't want Carter to win," said Lyn Nofziger, a long-time Reagan retainer who plans to travel with Senator Robert J. Dole, the Republican Vice-Presidential nominee, during the next several weeks. "But it's hard for a lot of us to generate any enthusiasm

Nor is the role of Mr. Reagan entirely clear. He has now talked three timeswith the President—on nomination night, the next morning and bytelephone a week ago Thursday. On the thirdoccasion, Mr. Ford said that his chief of staff, Richard Cheney, would confer soon with Michael Deaver, a ranking Reagan aide, about campaign plans.

Late this week, however, Mr. Deaver said he still had not heard from Mr. Cheney. Commitments to campaign for other candidates around the country, he said, have already filled the former Governor's schedule for all but the last two weeks of October.

Except for a joint appearance with Mr. Ford on a closed-circuit fund-raising appeal Oct. 7, Mr. Deaver reported, "we're still waitingfor the Ford committee to tell us what we should be doing."

'A Lot of Scars' Remain

Mr. Haerle, a Reagan protege who supported Mr. Ford in the primary, conceded that "the Ford-Reagan fight cost all of us a lot, and it left a lot of scars out here." Some angry Reagan backers, he predicted, will use the senatorial contest between S.I. Hayakawa and John V. Tunney, the Democratic incumbent, as "a bomb shelter," avoiding the Presidential race altogether.

But the party chairman argued that despite the scars, despite what he called "our extremely slow start," Mr. Ford could still win in California if he used the debate and televison ads to play on "the underlying anxiety about this guy Carter, whom we know nothing about."

"Most of all," said Mr. Haerle over breakfast in San Francisco one morning this week, "the President needs to re-establish the idea that he is a competent leader, which he's lost as a result of the attacks by Governor Reagan."

Because of the weak party structures in California, it has become the pre-eminent media state in politics, and its voters are accustomed to making voting decisions on the basis of what they see on television. For that reason, politicians here are convinced that the three Ford-Carter debates will be pivotal if not decisive.

"I think the President is going to carry California," said Pete Wilson, th of San Diego, "even though bo paigns are invisible at the mome going to carry it because Carter votes by looking either too wish or too dogmatic."

Intentions of Gov. Brown

On the Democratic side, there theories as to Mr. Brown's in One, voiced by Willie Brown, the ken black Assemblyman, and seconded by at least a dozen pr Democrats, is that the Governor as little as possible, hoping to c path for a Brown-Ford contest fo from now.

"Jerry likes Jimmy about as I like Lester Maddox," said the As man. Added John McAllister, a active in party affairs: "The G is interested in the Governor, methods make Machiavelli look Good Humor Man."

But Mickey Cantor, who r Brown's Presidential campaign, an O'Connell, in charge of Mr. Carte fornia bid, both insisted that Mr. was prepared to make a major e the Georgian's behalf, once the le bill-signing period ends Sept. 30

Mr. Cantor said that Mr. Bro been "highly impressed" by the cratic nominee during their mee Plains, Ga., and would spend 2 stumping for the Democratic ti October.

Although the two figures are p cisely comparable because of diffe counting practices, Mr. O'Conn about $285,000 to spend, compar about $1.5 million available to McGovern here in 1972. As a res Carter switchboard is under there are no bumper stickers, boards and, as yet, no phone ban gional and sub-regional field have been hired, but beyond that thing will have to be carried volunteers.

In the next week or 10 day O'Connell plans to call all of Cali members of Congress, legislators a portant mayors in an attempt to i them in the campaign and to ove what he describes as "their de need to have their egos personal saged."

But even such heroic measures w restore the Democratic registratio to what it was in 1974. The low t that year resulted in heavy purges voting rolls, and a relatively late-st registration drive this year —eve reaches its goal —will fall well sh re-enrolling the 2.1 million lost Dem ic voters, despite increases in popul

Democrats Likely to Keep Big Majority in House, According to Gallup Poll

The Democratic Party is likely to retain the strong majority in the House of Representatives that it gained in the off-year elections of 1974, according to the latest Gallup Poll.

The survey found that 57 percent of those interviewed favored the Democratic Party in their districts and 34 percent the Republican Party, with 9 percent either favoring other parties or undecided.

With 291 members, the Democrats now hold 67 percent of the 435 House seats; Republicans hold the rest. The latest poll therefore indicates that the Republicans at best may pick up a few seats on Nov.

At the same time, the poll does not reflect the effect of the Presidential election itself on House races. Normally, the winner of the election pulls along with him members of his party into the House.

The findings, based on interviews made in person from Aug. 27-30 in 300 places around the nation, reflect the results of a recent poll that indicated that 47 percent of the public thought that the Democratic Party would do a better job of keeping the country prosperous than would the Republican Party, which 24 percent supported.

The poll was based on interviews with 1,084 registered voters who indicated they would probably vote. They were asked this question: "If the elections for Congress were being held today, which party would you like to see win in this Congressional district, the Democratic Party or the Republican Party?"

DOLE MAKES JOKING A CAMPAIGN DEVICE

G.O.P. Running Mate's Targets Are Usually Democrats, but Often Humor Is at His Expense

By CHRISTOPHER LYDON
Special to The New York Times

WOODBRIDGE, N.J., Sept. 18—The nearly constant element in Senator Robert J. Dole's speeches along the Vice-Presidential campaign trail is a joke without a point. The Republican nominee from Kansas, calls it "the bear story" and he had told it 19 times in the last month before he arrived in New Jersey today.

A bear, it seems, walked into a bar, ordered a bottle of beer and put a five-dollar bill on the counter. The bartender served the bear then rushed to his back-room boss for instructions. "Give it back a nickel," said the boss, "it will never know the difference."

Some time later the bartender, fascinated, walked around and took a stool next to his new customer. "You know," the bartender said, "we don't have many bears in here." The bear replied: "I don't suppose you do at $4.95 a bottle."

Was that a comment on inflation, on consumer fraud, or on the bearish polls on the Ford-Dole ticket? "Now there's a moral to that story," Mr. Dole told a St. Louis fund-raising dinner the other night, "and we're working on it, and if you have any suggestions, send them to Jimmy Carter's headquarters in Peanutville, America."

What the Dole Campaign Is Like

The "Bob Dole Campaign Express" is more than a little like the bear story — giddy, repetitive, relaxed about absurdity, high-spirited but quite uncertain whither it is heading, in November or even a day or two ahead of time.

Senator Dole's tour often seems to have been planned, if at all, by a prankster—"visual" events like the Senator's factory visit with black machinists in Birmingham, Ala., last night, and his march in the American Legion parade in Trenton late this afternoon, tend to get scheduled at the wrong time ot make televisionn news. A high-domed press bus got stuck under a low bridge in Boston Thursday night. Gremlins put typographical errors in his speech text, as this morning, when Mr. Dole stumbled over a line denouncing Democrats for throwing taxpayers' money into "the gaping maw of new social and make-war programs." He meant to say, "make-work."

But Bob Dole is a campaigner who revels in jokes, including unplanned ones and jokes on himself. Before the Chamber of Commerce in Lexington, Ky., last week he observed, "The only union that ever supported me was the Women's Christian Temperance Union—and they're having second thoughts."

That may be a stock line for business groups. But the typical Dole cracks at Mr. Carter, the Democrats' Presidential candidate, and his running mate, Senator Walter F. Mondale ("Mondale, Tuesdale and all those folks"), seem to rattle forth spontaneously. He will try any line once: "Now we've had the New Deal and the Fair Deal and the Fast Deal, and we're about to have the Or-Deal if Carter's elected," he said in Boston.

Putting Down Democrats

And, Mr. Dole continued, when he stepped into the Senate chamber last week, "Senator McGovern was making a speech. He said, 'Gentlemen, let me tax your memories' and Ted Kennedy"—the Massachusetts Democrat who had led the liberal forces on the tax bill—"jumped up and said, 'Why haven't we thought of that before?' "

Mr. Dole's audiences likeit best when the lines tumble pell-mell after each other as if they were out of control—as in Birmingham last night, when he remarked that people keep asking why President Ford chose him. The more people ask the more hecampaigns, Mr. Dole said.

At the Kansas City convention, he went on, he and his wife were staying in a room next to John B. Connally's suite. He underlined the different accommodations for Mr. Connally in a series of laughs. When he had heard the corridor commotion on the morning of the Vice-Presidential selection, he said, "I said to Elizabeth: Put your ear to the door and find out what they're saying.

"See if you hear a name you're familiar with....

"That's legalin Kansas City....

"My name was mentioned. She didn't know in what way—whether someone had a vodka and pineapple juice"—Dole pineapple juice, it went without saying.

"It's a lot better for you than peanut butter, believe me....

"It doesn't stick to the roof of your mouth....

"Would you buy a used peanut from Jimmy Carter?"

'Pick-Up' Campaign Squad

Senator Dole's brief meeting with President Ford at the White House this morning seems to have confirmed a feeling among the pick-upcampaign squad around the Vice Presidential candidate that his travels need a sharper focus. James Baker, President Ford's campaign manager, referred to Senator Dole's schedule last week as one of the "rough spots" he wants to eliminate.

Arriving at Newark Airport this afternoon, Mr. Dole told reporters who had traveled 15,000 miles with him last week, twice from coast to coast, that his emphasis henceforth would be on rural America, small towns and particularly the South.

"Carter's support in the South is eroding, it's very soft," Senator Dole said, declining to elaborate on poll figures Mr. Ford shared with him this morning.

In the South, too, Mr. Dole's main weapon is ridicule—an ancient political device that Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona and Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California both used effectively against Mr. Carter in Democratic primaries lastspring.

Dole's Joke About Carter

In Birmingham last night Mr. Dole said he had telephoned Mr. Carter recently in Plains, Ga., and found that the Democrat had three phone numbers—"like everything else," Mr. Dole said. "He's got three positions on every issue." President Ford and Mr. Carter will havethree debates, Mr. Dole keeps saying, so that Mr. Carter can give three answers to each question.

But Mr. Dole's style means that he may be racing to deflate Mr. Carterfaster than he deflates himself. "I'mvery happy to be here," Mr. Dole commonly greets his audiences. "When you're a Republican, you're happy to be anywhere."

South Florida Is Stirred by Study Indicating That Boom Has Ended

By B. DRUMMOND AYRES Jr.
Special to The New York Times

FORT MYERS, Fla., Sept. 18—When Prof. Howard T. Odum came to town one night this week and pronounced that the boom in south Florida just might be over, he was immediately assailed as a dreamy academic, if not the rankest heretic in the Sunbelt.

Florida gained more residents than any other state in the first half of this decade—880 a day for a total of about 1.5 million—and many Floridians see growth as the key to continued happiness and prosperity.

But there this professor was, a soft-spoken environmental scientist from the University of Florida, daring to suggest to the Planning Commission of the fastest-growing town in the country that the energy crisis had left south Florida "at or near" its growth potential and that "this is the optimistic view.' He offered many charts and complicated calculations relating energy units to the cost of living and moving about, but no magic elixir to cure the energy shortage.

What made Mr. Odum's theory particularly hard for growth advocates to swallow was the knowledge that it was the result of a five-year, $3.5 million study sponsored, not by the professor, but by the United States Government and the State of Florida. It carried a certain cachet.

The Professor Called Crazy

The governmental imprimature so frustrated one spectator in the planning commission hall that she was reduced to mumbling, "That man's crazy, crazy." How could there be an end to a boom in a town that added 10,000 new residents every year for the last five years?

Mr. Odum was not deterred. He said that acceptance of his theory of a dying boom would make it possible to plan ahead, "so you won't build a lot of condominiums that will never fill up."

There are already thousands of unsold condominiums in Fort Myers and elsewhere in south Florida. Developers say they are the result of overbuilding, but Mr. Odum suggested that the energy shortage might have shut off the flow of buyers.

Other Cities Affected

Nor did the professor limit his provocative spell to this once-languid resort on the southern Gulf Coast. By the end of the week, he also had showed up at planning commission meetings in Miami, Naples and La Belle, thereby leaving an arc of controversay across south Florida.

Which was exactly what his sponsors wanted.

State planners in Tallahassee, the Florida capital, have long worried that not enough was being done to control the state's headlong growth. The legislature has enacted a law that requires each county to submit a use plan by 1979, but the law has limited enforcement provisions.

"If Howard's theory does no more than make people think more deeply about Florida than ever before, then it's served a good purpose." Don Young, a state planner, said after the meeting in Fort Myers.

Do the Federal and state governments agree with the professor's conclusions?

"Not necessarily," Theodore W. Sudia, a National Parks Service scientist, said. "We just hope they'll be provocative at the least, that they will get something going."

The Government's Role

The Federal Government's role in the study is somewhat unusual, since there is no Congressional mandate for Federal involvement in local and state land use planning. In fact, Congress has refused several times to approve sucs a mandate.

"We put up money for this one," Mr. Sudia said, "because the arc of growth in southern Florida curves around Federal holdings in the Everglades and the Cypress Forest. We're worried about what effect growth is having on things like water flow and atmosphere."

Mr. Odum said that a slowdown or halt in growth in southern Florida would give the region a chance to repair some of the damage done earlier by dredging and bulldozing an ecosystem considered one of the most unusual and delicately balanced in the United States.

He urged local governments to replace some bulldozed vegetation and to plug or narrow some drainage canals. He suggested that the region could save on energy expenditures by filtering sewage through swamps.

Odum's Theory

Under Mr. Odum's growth theory, which he concedes is "new and untried," when the cost of energy rises to a certain point, the pace of growth inevitably slows.

"As long as you can afford to buy the energy necessary to keep you environment clean and working," he explained, "you can grow indefinitely and stack people one on top of another forever. Well, south Florida has finally reached the point where energy has gotten too expensive for more growth.

"People," he added, "won't move to a place where it costs too much to live. I think the southeastern coast and Miami have already reached that point, that people are even pulling out. The southwestern coast can still handle a few more folks because of more efficient use of energy."

Miamians reacted quickly to Mr. Odum's assertion that their area was on the decline. A leading Miami growth expert, Reinhold P. Wolff, stated flatly that the area could absorb another half-million people.

Harry Rodda, the chairman of the Fort Myers area planning commission, reported that he had noted a "definite increase" in the number of former Miamians moving into his city. But he stopped short of endorsing any other section of the Odum study.

"We'll just have to see what we can salvage from this one," he said.

Radio Spares Safety Director

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Sept. 18 (AP)—The reappearance of a police radio has spared this city's safety director from a self-imposed two-day suspension. Allen Bryan, whose job is the equivalent of police commissioner, suspended himself for two days for losing a police radio while on patrol with Police Chief John Nevin on Sept. 5 in an area that had been the site of antibusing demonstrations. The chief called Mr. Bryan yesterday to tell him that the radio had been found wedged under the front seat of Chief Nevin's car.

LAND SWINLDE SUSPECT ARRAIGNED IN CALIFORNIA

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 18 (UPI)—Richard P. Curran, allegedly involved in a multi-million-dollar and swindle under investigation by a slain reporter, Dan Bolles, was arraigned before a United States magistrate yesterday and will be extradicted to Phoenix next week.

He was being held in Los Angeles in lieu of $25,000 bail. He waived extradition and no specific date was set for his transfer to Phoenix.

Federal Bureau of Investigation agents arrested Mr. Curran, 47 years old, of Malibu, Calif., at Los Angeles International Airport as he stepped off a plane from Puerto Vallarta, Mexico.

Mr. Curran, former president of Cochise College Park, Inc., a Scottsdale, Ariz., land concern, and 17 other persons were indicted last Tuesday by a Federal grand jury in Phoenix.

He was charged with mail fraud, securities fraud, interstate transportation of fraudulently obtained money and violation of the Federal Racketeer-Influenced and Corrupt Organization statute.

An F.B.I. spokesman said that the indictment involved the multimillion-dollar Cochise College Park land project in which more than 10,000 investors allegedly were swindled out of about $40 million, believed to be one of the biggest such cases in the state's history.

This project was among several subjects being investigated by Mr. Bolles, a reporter for The Arizona Republic, who was killed in June by a bomb planted under his car as he went to meet a news source.

Mr. Curran was believed to be the first defendant arrested in the case.

Live Aborted Fetuses Protected

SACRAMENTO, Calif., Sept. 18 (UPI)—Legislation signed yesterday by Edmund G. Brown Jr. will require doctors to give medical care to living fetuses in an abortion, the same as they would to a premature child born naturally. During Senate debate, Senator David Roberti said that the state had received at least five complaints that live aborted fetuses had been left unattended to die.

GEORGE GARDNER DIES, ART PATRON IN BOSTON

Member of Prominent Family Was Also a Financier and Won 10 Letters in Harvard Sports

George Peabody Gardner, a financier, philanthropist and member of one of Boston's oldest and most noted families, died yesterday in Dresden Mills, Me. He was 88 years old and lived in Brookline, Mass.

Mr. Gardner was a leading art patron and former stock broker and, continuing a family tradition, had been a director or trustee of a score of business, cultural, educational and charitable organizations.

A tall, slim man, he had been an outstanding athlete at Harvard College, winning 10 letters in hockey, baseball, track and tennis. He was also a scholar, graduating cum laude in 1910 and winning a Phi Beta Kapp key.

He was born in Boston, Jan. 28, 1888, the son of George Peabody and Esther Burnett Gardner. Like many prominent Bostonians, he was a graduate of St. Mark's Schol in Southboro, Mass. Later, he was president of the preparatory school's board of trustees.

For many years he was the president and trustee of the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum in the Fenway section of Boston. The museum, housed in his late aunt's Venetian palazzo mansion, was willed by her to the people of Boston and holds a treasure-trove of art by such masters as Rembrandt, Vermeer, Titian, Raphael and Cellini.

For 35 years Mr. Gardner was also a trustee of the distinguished Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

On leaving Harvard, he became a partner in the brokerage firm of Jackson & Curtis, the predecessor of Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis Inc. He resigned as senior partner in 1939 to assume management of his family's investment trust after his father's death.

He was board chairman of Gardner Associates, Inc., an investment management firm, until 1968, when he retired at the time the concern was merged as Gardner and Preston Moss Inc.

Devoted to Harvard

Mr. Gardner had been president of the Boston & Providence Railroad, vice president and trustee of both the Children's Medical Center in Boston and the Humane Society of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and a trustee of the Episcopal Diocesan Investment Trust. Devoted to his alma mater, he had been chairman of Harvard's executive committee, a member of its Board of Overseers and secretary of the Harvard Corporation.

His directorships included the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, the General Electric Company, the Boston Fun, the First National Bank of Boston, the Old Colony Trust Company, the Chase Fund of Boston, the Shareholders Trust of Boston, the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company, the Eastern Steamship Company and the Wilson Jones Company.

Mr. Gardner's varied enthusiasms included sailing and, in 1959, his book "Ready About: Sailing Adventures Down East," was published by A. S. Barnes. He wrote several other books, mostly about his travels abroad.

In World War I Mr. Gardner was an ensign in the Navy Reserve.

A former Massachusetts state singes tennis champion, Mr. Gardner had been prseident of the Longwood Cricket Club of Boston. His other memberships included the Harvard Clubs of Boston and New York and the Somerset and Tavern clubs in Boston.

Surviving are his wife, the former Rose Phinney Grosvenor; three sons, George Peabody Jr. John Lowell and Robert Grosevnor; three daughters, Katharine, Peabody Colemna, Isbella Stewart Tate nad Rose Phinney Cutler; a sister, Katharine G. Myles, 16 grandchlidren and nine great-grandchildren.

Funeral arrangements were not yet made.

Gunnar Lange, Former Minister Of Trade in Sweden, Dies at 67

STOCKHOLM, Sept. 18 (UPI)—Gunnar Lange, who was Sweden's trade minister from 1955 to 1970, died Thursday after a long illness. He was 67 years old.

Mr. Lange was a member of Parliament from 1953 until his death.

In 1954, after a year in Parliament, he was named civil minister. The next year he became trade minister, a position he held until he resigned.

In October 1974 he became seriously ill, and his illness interfered with his parliamentary duties. He was a member of Parliament's foreign policy committee. He was also chairman for many years of the Swedish Soccer Federation.

Mr. Lange was born in Stockholm. In 1928 he received a grant to study agriculture in the United States. From 1941 to 1943 he was assistant professor of agriculture and national economics at the University of North Carolina.

He returned to Sweden in June 1943, joining the research department of the agriculture board.

U.S. Climber Dies on Peak Whose Name She Bore

NEW DELHI, Sept. 17 (AP) — An American woman has died of "acute high altitude sickness" on the Himalayan peak she was named for by her father, a conqueror of Mount Everest, the Indian Mountaineering Foundation reported Friday.

Nanda Devi Unsoeld, 22 years old, of Olympia, Wash., was part of an Indian-American expedition tackling the Nanda Devi peak by a new route over its northwest face. The climbers were led by her father, William F. Unsoeld, who in 1963 became one of the first two Americans to climb Everest, at 29,028 feet, the world's tallest mountain.

Yugoslav Paper Rebuffs U.S. On Report of Terrorist's Visit

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia, Sept. 17 (Reuters)—The semiofficial Yugoslav newspaper Borba said today that United States reports that an international terrorist, Ilich Ramírez Sánchez had recently visited Yugoslavia were a cover for American embarrassment over Croatian separatist activities that led to the hijacking of a Trans World Airlines jet last weekend.

"Did someone in the State Department anticipate his arrival in Yugoslavia in order to cover up the hijacking and all the anti-Yugoslav intrigues?" the paper asked.

The Foreign Ministry here announced yesterday that a check of all security records had yielded no clue that the terrorist, known as Carlos, had been in Yugoslavia.

Carlos is being sought in many parts of the world for his guerrilla activities, including the abduction of Arab oil ministers in Vienna last December.

Last weekend, a TWA Boeing 727 was hijacked by a Croatian extremist group and forced to fly to Paris. On Sunday, the official Yugoslav press agency Tanyug charged that the hijacking had been one of a series of anti-Yugoslav actions conceived in influential United States circles.

White Males Said to Dominate Federal Advisory Committees

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18 (UPI)—A study released yesterday by the Senate Reports subcommittee disclosed that in 1975 women held only 11 percent and blacks 4 percent of the 22,256 positions on Federal advisory committees and commissions.

Of the 1,267 Federal advisory committees, commissions, councils, boards and other panels, 36 percent were all male and 50 percent were all white. The national census shows that women compromise 51.3 percent of the population and blacks 11.3 percent.

Senator Lee Metcalf, Democrat of Montana, the subcommittee chairman, said that the study showed "a gross imbalance, which discriminates against both women and blacks."

More than 19,000 advisory committee members are public citizens appointed by the President or agency head. More than 45 departments and agencies operate these committees, which advise the Government in virtually every area of policy making.

The Federal Advisory Committee Act requires that memership "be fairly balanced in terms of points of view represented and the functions to be performed."

KLETZ—Eleanor. Eleanor, my darling, since you left me I have been struggling against a crushing loneliness. And now on your birthday, I miss the touch of your gentle hands, your warm and fond embrace, your sweet and tender kisses, and the whispered magical words "I love you."

As I see the picture of your smiling eyes and beautiful face, the mist in my eyes becomes cloudy and damp, and it is so difficult to contain myself, because I miss you so much, and know that missing someone you love is the ultimate in man's expression of devotion and caring.

But for the beautiful memories of our life of devotion for each other, and the ever concern for me of our loving Susan and Herman, I would be lacking the courage and spirit to carry on against a loneliness that is both devastating and destructive.

I will always love and miss you until the end of my time, and then I will join and embrace you and hope and pray that it will cause no anguish or grief, no pain or hurt, no sadness, sorrow or tears to those we are forced to leave behind us, our devoted and loving Susan and Herman and our grandchildren.

Always,
YOUR MICHAEL.

SURE, I LOVE PANTS. BUT I'M NOT THE BLUE JEAN TYPE. JOHN ANTHONY KNOWS: WOMEN LIKE TO BE FEMININE, EVEN IN PANTS.

That's the kind of thinking that won him "Winnie," Coty's coveted Return Award. There are ways to wear pants that are more feminine than a dress. This is one: Pleated, navy doeskin wool pants. With them, the pearliest grey silky stock-tied shirt. Over them, a long, muzzy, navy mohair cardigan. A great color/texture mix. I'm at my best. And most feminine. Mohair and wool cardigan, $140. Polyester shirt, $86. Woolpants, $150. All in 4 to 14 sizes. Collection Sportswear, Third Floor.

JOHN ANTHONY IS COMING TO SFA with a whole collection of fresh ideas for your feminine dressing. He'll be here Monday, September 20, during the informal modeling from 12 to 4.

Harlem Heights Battle Revisited: Americans Briefly Turned Tide

Revolutionary War historians have seriously underestimated the significance of the Battle of Harlem Heights, according to a Columbia University historian who believes the strong American showing in the battle buoyed flagging Army morale at a critical point in the war.

Historians have generally interpreted the battle, one of the sharpest of the Revolutionary War, as a single day's success for the Continental Army under Gen. George Washington during a discouraging loss to the British in the Battle of New York. However, James P. Shenton, professor of American History at Columbia, perceives an added significance in the strong American showing. In which American troops forced an orderly, if temporary, British retreat.

Mr. Shenton called the Battle of Harlem Heights "a seemingly trivial military incident that might have swayed the fortunes of the Revolution by showing the Americans that retreat was not their only recourse."

On the occasion of the 200th anniversary of the Sept. 16, 1776, battle, Mr. Shenton led a walking tour last Thursday for some 30 neighborhood schoolchildren and spoke about the significance of the battle.

British Efficiency a Topic

For two days before the Harlem Heights battle Mr. Shenton said the American troops had been beaten back at Kips Bay, and before that, on Long Island. Finally, General Washington had retreated to Harlem Heights and set up his headquarters at the Morris House, in what is now Washington Heights. Morale among the ragtag American troops was at a low point in the war.

"A more efficient British army could have ended it then and there with General Washington toted back to England as a trophy," Mr. Shenton said. "But for reasons that can be assigned only to stupidity or a lack of strategy they didn't defeat us."

Professor Shenton led the high school students to the roof of the 14-story Alt-schul Hall on the Barnard College campus Thursday morning, and pointed down to battle locations on land where Columbia University now stands.

Early on the morning of Sept. 1, 1776, battle began when 150 Connecticut rangers were ordered by Washington to determine how far north on Manhattan Island the British troops had advanced. The reconnaissance force met British resistance at what is now West 106th Street, and retreated. But as the outnumbered Americans hastily retreated across the hollow way, a gully near what is now West 125th Street, British buglers taunted the Americans with "View Hallo," the hunter's call that the fox has gone to earth and the chase is over.

Washington Was Incensed

General Washington, incensed by the taunt, ordered his troops, now bolstered to about 850 men, to counterattack. The British retreated, finally standing their ground in a buckwheat field where the Barnard College campus now stands, near Broadway and 120th Street. The British were farther forced back to their original lines at 106th Street before the day was over.

"The Americans, accustomed to losing, finally learned that there was a possibility that they could win," Mr. Shenton said. Although the American troops were forced soon after the Battle of Harlem Heights to retreat to Westchester and later to New Jersey, "the lesson of Harlem Heights was not soon forgotten," Mr. Shenton said.

Creation of Jobs Is Held by Study To Be Way of Reducing Welfare

By PETER KIHSS

A new federally financed study of how families go off welfare has called for making job creation a top national priority, along with encouraging two-parent families and seeking to discourage family breakup.

The new study dealt with families that quit welfare because their need for relief help had been reduced—a group that it said made up only 28 percent of 100,000 New York City case-closings in the year ended in March 1975.

Other case-closings were attributed mainly to the recipients' failure to comply with rules or to administrative errors, leading shortly to reopenings — the so-called "churning" phenomenon.

Jobs a Major Factor

Of the "true" closings resulting from reduced need, the study sampling indicated that 48 percent had gotten new or better-paying jobs, and 17 percent had a father or mother return to the family or a new marriage occur.

The new report, "Former Welfare Families: Independence and Recurring Dependency" was the work of a staff under Anne N. Shkuda, senior research associate of the Center for New York City Affairs of the New School for Social Research. It was contracted for by the Social Security Administration.

Interviews were carried out with a random sample of families with children whose New York City welfare cases were closed because of improved situations in the six months ended in January 1975. There were 354 families reached within one month of case-closing, 300 of them located again six months later.

The families had advantages—45 percent had both a mother and father present, compared with only 14 percent of all welfare families. They had a smaller proportion of younger children. The parents had more education.

Few Need Public Help

They usually found jobs on their own—51 percent through advertisements or friends, 28 percent going back to previous employers. Only 17 percent reported jobs found through the WIN—Work Incentive—or other training programs. Only three persons found jobs through the State Employment Service.

Those returning to former jobs, the study said, had used welfare as a temporary aid. For others, the study said, "it seems that comprehensive efforts to stimulate employment would have a greater impact on welfare case-closings than would publicly administered training and placement programs."

To promote two-parent families, the study suggested equalizing welfare benefits—now higher for single-parent families than when two parents are present.

"To the extent that this equalization would encourage families to stay together," the study said, "benefit payments would be reduced by the addition of the incomes of working families.

"The presence of both parents would also increase the likelihood of the families becoming independent of welfare in the future."

Other Benefits Help

Fifteen percent of closings based on reduced needs were attributed to receipt of other benefits, such as unemployment insurance or Social Security.

The study said welfare officials should consider the possibility of such benefits when applicants show up, and help them for eligibles instead of simply looking to uncover unreported income.

Four percent of closing resulted from getting support payments from absent parents, almost all after court orders.

Within six months of leaving the welfare rolls, 17 percent of the sampled families came back. One-third of these reopenings resulted from loss of jobs or pay, 17 percent because a spouse had left.

Only 11 percent of the families seeking to stay off Welfare used food stamps, and only 28 percent used Medicaid, the study said. Many more might rave remained eligible but were unaware of such available help.

Only 27 percent of the former welfare families with children under the age of 13 arranged any sort of child care on a regular basis, usually when the mother had gone to work. Baby-sitters or relatives accounted for 62 percent of such arrangements, and day-care or Head Start center for a third.

"There was little evidence that either availability or cost of child care was a major problem for the ex-welfare families," the study said.

The 129-page report can be obtained from the Research Department of the Center for New York City Affairs at 66 Fifth Avenue for $5 a copy.

Parents of Dead Child Win Right To Sue Doctors for Malpractice

By IRVING SPIEGEL

The parents of a child who died of a congenital kidney disease yesterday won the right to sue two physicians for $4.5 million for their alleged failure to give proper medical advice.

Justice Harold Hyman of State Supreme Court, sitting in Queens, refused to dismiss the malpractice suit brought by the child's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Steven M. Park of 162-41 Powells Boulevard in Whitestone, Queens.

Mrs. Park's daughter, Lara, died in July 1970 at the age of 2½. Previously, an infant daughter died at birth of the same disease.

The parents alleged that the defendants had provided "neglect care, treatment and advice" to Mrs. Park during her pregnancy.

In their complaint, the parents said the physicians had not informed them "of the risk of the infant's being born with such congenital defects inherent in another pregnancy."

The parents alleged that the obstetricians had said "there was no reason to fear that a future pregnancy would result in the birth of an unhealthy, congenitally defective child."

In making his decision, Justice Hyman, in effect, did not sursue the "public policy" rationale set by the State Appellate Division last month when it dismissed a medical-malpractice action against a physician for his failure to abort a fetus later born with a fatal genetic ailment.

Study Finds Injury Risk in Medical Research Similar to Normal Living

By JANE E. BRODY

A first broad-scale attempt to determine how many persons may be harmed by their participation in federally funded medical research has indicated that the risk of injury is similar to that faced in ordinary living.

The study, done by a study group of the United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare, comes at a time of mounting concern about protection of research subjects and how to inform them properly of the risks they may face.

The study findings are preliminary and, since they are based on interviews with researchers, they may not represent the actual incidence of injury as would be detected through a case-by-case analysis.

Public Reassurance Seen

However, the findings, as described in the Sept. 16 issue of The New England Journal of Medicine, suggest that the rate of injury may not be as great as some persons have feared.

In an editorial in the same issue of the journal, Dr. Bernard Barber, sociologist at Barnard College and a specialist on the ethics of human experimentation, said that the study "should be reassuring to the concerned public" because of the low rate of injury found and because the research is "evidence of the serious and knowledgeable concern of the biomedical research community with a matter that their patients and subjects are worried about."

Like 'Everyday Life'

The study was done as part of an effort of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to determine whether persons injured in the course of H.E.W.-funded research should be compensated for their injuries.

The data were obtained through telephone interviews with 331 investigators who in the last three years conducted research that involved a total of nearly 133,000 human subjects. About half of the investigators said that their research was "nontherapeutic," that is, it did not involve treatments that could be expected to benefit the study participants.

Because volunteers for non therapeutic research stand to gain little from their participation, only the most minimal risk to their health would be considered ethical.

The authors of the study, headed by Dr. Philippe V. Cardon of the National Institutes of Health, found that "the risks of participation in nontherapeutic research may be no greater than those of everyday life."

"Of about 93,000 study subjects who participated in nontherapeutic research, 0.8 percent were reported injured," with one person permanently disabled by a stroke that may not have been related to the research, the authors reported.

Thirty-seven of the 711 injuries were described as "temporarily disabling" and 673 as "trivial." There were no deaths.

The authors said that this injury rate was roughly comparable to the annual rate of accidental injuries in this country that occur through ordinary living.

Of the 39,000 or so persons who participated in "therapeutic" research in which treatments were involved that could be expected to benefit the participants, 10.8 percent were described as having been injured in some way. There were 43 deaths, 37 of them among 3,688 patients who received drug treatment (chemotherapy) for cancer, one of whom was given the wrong dose. The remaining six deaths were due to adverse reactions to drugs.

Thirteen patients suffered injuries that were permanently disabling and 937 were temporarily disabled as a result of their participation in research. More than 3,000 participants experienced so-called trivial injuries.

This rate of injury, the authors concluded, is comparable to that experienced as a result of ordinary treatment outside of a research setting.

The authors in addition to Dr. Cardon were F. William Dommel Jr., a lawyer, and Dr. Robert R. Trumble, both of the National Institutes of Health. They said that their findings represented "tentative and rough comparisons" and that much more data were needed before the rate of injury could be definitely known.

In his editorial, Dr. Barber applauded this "first approximation" of the rate of injury and urged that more studies be done, with the eventual development of a "no-fault" insurance system to cover research accidents.

Good kitchen knives are essential to good cooking. Food preparation is quicker, more efficient, and more enjoyable with fine knives. When you cook, the proper preparation of ingredients can make the difference between success and failure. As cutlery specialists for over 40 years, Hoffritz knows that fine quality kitchen knives are an invaluable aid. The right knives in your kitchen can save you time and money. But most important of all, they can make you a better cook.

There are dozens of different kitchen knives available to the cook. Ideally, the special purpose knife designed to do a specific cutting task should be used. But most people don't have the room for such a variety. Therefore, Hoffritz, the world's largest retail cutlery merchants, has carefully selected the four sizes they feel can best fulfill most of your kitchen cutting chores. These four Molybdenum Stainless knives are the result. They are made to Hoffritz specifications—that means the very best—and they are the most important knives needed to prepare and serve food properly.

There is a 13¾" Chef's Knife with a 9" blade for heavy duty cutting, carving, even slicing. This is a good knife for meat cutting. The 12½" Cook's Knife with a 7" blade is ideal for most food preparation. With ease you can use this knife to cut and chop, dice and shred, carve and slice. The 11" Utility Knife with a 6" blade may well become your favorite in the kitchen. It is perfect for slicing fruit and vegetables, great for cheese, handy for smaller cuts of meat, ideal for chicken. And it can halve a sandwich almost without effort. It's THE knife for all your day-in, day-out cutting chores. The 9½" knife with the 5" blade is called the Big Parer. It was specially made a little bigger to give you a lot more service. Use it for slicing, peeling, dicing and trimming. The blades and handles of these four knives were made to keep their good looks for years. But, like all fine cutlery, they should not be subjected to dishwasher detergents.

These knives are worth every bit of our regular $30 price. For a limited time, however, Hoffritz is offering the complete set at 40% off. That's only $18 for the entire set of 4. A unique opportunity, indeed, to acquire a proper set of knives at very little cost.

P.S. Buy several as gifts. And an extra set for your second home. After this sale, they will be sold again at regular, year-round prices.

E.P.A.'s 5-Year Plan Is Criticized For Focus on Short-Term Issues

By BAYARD WEBSTER

The Environmental Protection Agency, which presented a five-year research and development program to Congress six months ago, has come in for a modicum of praise and a lot of criticism of its plans for the next half-decade.

A review of the E.P.A.'s research plans has been made for the Office of Technology Assessment by a group of scientific and industrial experts. The survey has been distributed to members of Congress and was made available to the public last week.

The review, in general, praised the quality of E.P.A.'s research and said the agency's five-year program, its first, was "an important step toward expanding the public dialogue necessary to identify and establish national environmental goals."

But the review devoted most of its 130 pages to criticism of the agency's future development plans in a variety of areas. Its major complaint centered on the tendency of the agency to concentrate on short-term issues and problems at the expense of long-range research.

Criticism in Survey

The survey by the Office of Technology Assesment, the agency that furnishes Congress with advice and analysis on scientific and technological issues, also noted that the E.P.A. plans focused primarily on pollution control technologies that "were related directly to the enforcement and/or achievement of E.P.A.'s current regulations."

The review pointed out that in the area of pollution control and abatement technology, the regulatory agency's Office of Research and Development favored demonstration of devices over exploratory research. This tended to put the agency in the position of promoting its own technology, a posture that could be both suspicion-provoking and embarrassing.

Among criticisms cited in specific areas of planned research and development by the environmental agency were the following:

¶Insufficient resources are being devoted to exploratory research into new approaches to control air and water pollution emissions.

¶There are overlapping efforts by the E.P.A. and other Federal agencies and within the E.P.A. in minimizing environmental effects of solid waste disposal and in solid waste management programs aimed at energy resource recovery.

¶More E.P.A. research should be focused on increasing the efficiency of waste-water treatment plants, whose effluent is a factor in health and environmental problems.

¶More E.P.A. research should be focused on analyzing the global processes of chemical transport and transformation, since chemicals such as DDT, which the E.P.A. allows to be sold for use outside the United States, may re-enter the country in significant quantities through the atmosphere.

¶Although evidence is accumulating that many environmental pollutants are connected with the major causes of death and disability in the United States, the agency lacks a program for studying the long-term effects of constant exposure to low levels of these pollutants.

Factors Termed Ignored

The review also said that the environmental agency had failed to take into account the role that social attitudes, changes in life-style and major shifts in the economy—as opposed to "hardware" control solutions—play in the achievement of environmental quality.

Dr. Wilson K. Talley, the agency's assistant administrator for research and development, said in a statement that he welcomed the critical comments. He added that pointing out the "difference in perspective—the long-range versus the short-range approach—would help our agency to better prepare its research in future five-year plans."

The review by the Office of Technology Assessment of the environmental agency's future plans follows by two years an assessment of E.P.A. research by the National Academy of Sciences and the Senate Public Works Committee, both critical of the E.P.A.'s research efforts at the time. The agency reorganized its research department after the criticisms.

The Office of Technology Assessment came in for an uncomplimentary review itself last December when the resigning chairman of its advisory council, Harold Brown, criticized the office's concentration on immediate problems as opposed to the importance of long-range situations. Shortly afterward, a House of Representatives commission also issued a critical report on activities of the office, now in its third year of operation.

9,000 Employed at E.P.A.

The E.P.A., now in its sixth year, is one of the nation's biggest regulatory agencies, with some 9,000 employees and a budget of about $2 million a day. It is charged, among other things, with promoting "efforts which will prevent or eliminate damage to the environment and biosphere and stimulate the health and welfare of man."

The study by the Office of Technology Assessment was carried out with the assistance of three panels of specialists from a wide range of industrial, academic and scientific interests. The report, entitled "A Review of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency Environmental Research Outlook—1976 through 1980," can be obtained through the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Big-City School Systems, Beset by Money Problems, Face the Same Cutbacks New York Has Had to Make maintenance expenses, in an effort to protect instructional programs.

The authorities are trying to avoid dismissing the administrators and teachers. They are using attrition—letting positions go unfilled as personnel die or retire—rather than remove people from existing jobs.

Attrition is an especially painful policy because, with enrollments falling, the public schools had hoped to take advantage of the decline to lower class sizes by maintaining instructional strength at previous levels, an objective that now seems out of reach.

New York Feared as Example

Concern is growing that New York City's plight may be a harbinger for other large school systems. New York has enlarged its classes, eliminated 5,000 instructional positions, shortened its school day, reduced the number of elective subjects, slashed pupil transportation subsidies and pared services in such key areas as guidance, libraries and remediation.

"The simple truth is that time has run out and the New Orleans public schools are trapped in a fiscal vise that will continue closing until additional revenues can be found," Superintendent Gene Geisert said.

"We had to make some serious cuts," Dr. Geisert said of the system's $95.1 million budget. "We had to cut off some arms, legs and heads. We decided to keep athletics another year, but I don't know how much longer we can go until we have a system of only reading, writing and arithmetic."

Chicago's situation is perhaps illustrative of what is happening to those school systems that feel most threatened by insolvency. The local tax base, which furnishes 41.8 percent of the school district's $1 billion budget, has been steadily eroded as real estate has slipped in assessed value.

A revised state funding formula that was supposed to deliver $428 million in aid to the Chicago public schools this year has been scaled down to the point that the school system is expected to receive only $363 million.

Chicago Faces Uncertainty

On top of these setbacks, the 520,000-pupil school system has been facing the uncertainty surrounding the penalty that may be deducted from its state allocation because of the early closing.

The one-year penalty would be $51.2 million under the existing guidelines, but the state legislature has indicated its willingness to permit the penalty to be lowered to $30 million, payable over three years.

However, the Chicago Board of Education has challenged the legality of any penalty whatsoever, arguing, in part, that the school closing was an "act of God." Though a lower court this week upheld the school board, the state is expected to appeal the decision. The matter is far from settled.

It was this climate that prompted the Chicago Teachers Union to settle for a contract that holds salaries at last year's levels.

Jobs Chosen Over Raise

"Without this settlement we would have been in the position of getting a raise at the expense of the jobs of some of our members," said Robert M. Healey, the union president. "Even a 3-percent raise would have cost the system $15 million and it would have meant firing 1,000 teachers to find the money."

Chicago's tactic of trying to reduce staffs through attrition instead of outright dismissals is being used in many of the major school districts.

Philadelphia has eliminated 159 teaching positions without a dismissal, transferring some teachers and leaving vacancies unfilled. Cleveland lost six elementary school principals to retirement, but replaced only one, assigning some principals to cover more than one school.

The efforts to realize savings through deferral of plant maintenance have become a standard feature of most budgets.

Los Angeles, which has a backlog of $80 million in repairs, has had to cancel some classes because of leaky roofs.

New Orleans Uses Plywood

New Orleans has issued sheets of plywood to a school with 330 broken windows because the system could not afford immediately to replace the glass panes with tough vandal-resistant plastic.

Philadelphia's new budget has meant the dismissal of 211 custodial helpers, 25 custodians, 28 custodial assistants and 29 maintenance workers, representing an expected savings of $2.9 million in salaries.

Pittsburgh plans to paint school buildings every 10 or 11 years instead of every seven years.

"The schools are in awful shape," remarked Edward Winner, deputy superintendent for management in Washington. He said that a minor repair problem, such as a loose door hinge, is becoming a major problem because the work is being delayed and the whole door falls off.

The prevailing opinion of educators is that the only way further retrenchment by the big-city school systems can be prevented is by greater funding from state and Federal sources, diminishing the reliance on local taxpayers.

Public elementary and secondary education has grown into one of the chief fiscal enterprises in the United States, accounting for an outlay of $66.6 billion during the 1975-76 school year, according to the National Education Association. Now, however, many of the big-city school budgets are reaching a standstill and some are even slipping backward.

The Miami Public School District, which is taxing local property at the legal limit, is operating on a budget of $460.1 million, $57.7 million less than last year.

"Florida's tax structure is the root of the problem," said Pat Tornillo, executive director of the Dade County Classroom Teacher Association. "The property tax can no longer be the base tax for education."

Programs Chipped Away

The effects of the financial constraints on the educational programs are not always apparent, but the chipping away is beginning to have an impact, albeit a sometimes subtle one.

In Pittsburgh, for example, a lay reader program enabled the school district to hire college-educated adults from the community to read and grade the extra composition assignments of high school students for the sum of $5 an hour. Students were able to write twice as many compositions because of the help that the English teachers received.

The program has been dropped to save money—in an era when critics charge that American students' writing skills have declined precipitously.

Pittsburgh will save $60,000.

12 Blocks Along Atlantic Avenue To Be Closed for a Street Festival

A dozen blocks along Atlantic Avenue in downtown Brooklyn will be closed to traffic today for Atlantic-Antic 2, a street festival that will include arts, crafts, foods, computer games and a bicycle race.

The avenue will be traffic-free between Furman and Flatbush Avenues. Computer terminals will be set up at the corners of Third, Hoyt and Court Streets. Run by Brooklyn College and the City University computer center, the terminals will inventory lost and found items, tell jokes and offer message services.

The bike race will begin at 9:30 A.M. between Smith and Third Avenues and run for 20 miles. The cyclists, members of the United States Cycling Federation, will be competing for prizes worth $500.

A parade of 25 units, including a Middle Eastern dancer and a camel, will begin at noon.

Connecticut Is Blocking U.S. Antipollution Funds To New York and Jersey

HARTFORD, Sept. 18 (UPI)—Connecticut is holding up almost $21.4 billion in Federal funds for New York and New Jersey because of differences in air pollution standards, the state's Environmental Commissioner, Joseph N. Gill, said yesterday.

Mr. Gill said the five members of the state delegation to the Tristate Regional Planning Commission had withheld approval Thursday of a resolution acknowledging consistency between air quality plans for the three states.

The commission is composed of five members from each of the three states and approval of a majority of each's state delegation is needed to approve the resolution. The Federal aid is dependent on approval of the resolution.

The matter was put off until Nov. 18, when the panel meets again. Mr. Gill said he was hopeful that a compromise could be worked out.

Mr. Gill said Connecticut was scheduled to get only 0.5 percent of the $21.4 billion that would go to the three states over five years. He said Connecticut's decision to hold up the money for its neighbors was "the only practical way of getting everyone's attention."

He said Connecticut's objection was that less stringent air pollution standards for New York and New Jersey caused smog in Connecticut because the pollutants were carried there by the wind. The difference in standards, he said, is because Connecticut belongs to the United States Environmental Protection Agency's region one, while New York and New Jersey belong to region two.

"The problem is the health of the people of the state of Connecticut," Mr. Gill said. "This seemed a good time to bring it to the attention of the pepole who created the problem.

"They [New York and New Jersey] are generating the pollution and we are the recipients of it. We ought to play by the same rules."

Mr. Gill said the $21.4 billion was to be used for transportation projects that would help alleviate air pollution. He said Lynn Alan Brooks, another of Connecticut's representatives on the commission, had proposed an alternate plan that would commit the panel to alleviate the inequities within six months.

He said representatives of the two other states said they wanted to study the proposal, and it was tabled.

Connecticut's other representatives on the commission are Transportation Secretary James Shugrue, Mayor John Mandanici of Bridgeport and Robert Cairns of Madison, a transportation planner.

21 Wild Horses in Nevada, Facing Death, Win Reprieve Through Adoption Program

Special to The New York Times

BATTLE MOUNTAIN, Nev., Sept. 18—The 21 aging wild horses that had been scheduled to be killed earlier this week because homes could not be found for them have won a quick reprieve and will be placed through the United States Bureau of Land Management's "Adopt-a-Horse" program.

Fewer than 24 hours after the bureau announced that the horses would be shot and buried in the desert, the office here was flooded with adoption requests from people in all parts of the country who had heard or read about the plan to kill the wild horses.

"We had just about given up hope that we would ever find homes for these hard-to-place aging horses, but then came the immediate reaction," Gene Nodine, the bureau's district manager, said today. "We had so many requests that the phone didn't stop ringing the day the story was carried over the nation's press and radio. We have received more than 80 requests already, and have started screening the applicants to make sure that they are the kind of people that really want the horses and will take good care of them."

'They Wanted Them Anyhow'

Mr. Nodine said he told the applicants that the 19 stallions, one gelding and one mare ranged in age from 10 to 15 years and that "they are not as fit as the more popular younger ones." But he added that "the people all said they wanted them anyhow to save this strain of mustangs from extinction."

He also said that mares were the most popular because people want to breed them and raise their own wild horses. The Federal Government retains title to the adopted horses, but not to those born after adoption.

According to Robert Springer, who heads the Washington office responsible for the adoption program, more than 1,500 wild horses have been placed in "foster homes" since the program was started last June. In only a few cases, he added, has the bureau found it necessary to take back the horses because of a lack of interest or mistreatment.

He said the number of wild horses on public lands was estimated at 50,000, and burros at 5,000. About half of these animals are in Nevada.

Mr. Springer also said that the Wild Horse and Burro Act of 1971 provides for only three ways for disposing of excess animals: replacement on range land where adequate forage exists, adoption or destruction. In Nevada's case, the first option cannot be used because the increasing number of horses and burros has depleted the grazing areas.

The smoker's guide to low 'tar' cigarettes.

With all the controversy about smoking going on, lots of smokers are deciding to switch to low 'tar' and nicotine cigarettes.

But which low 'tar' and nicotine cigarette should a switcher switch to?

Well, for every smoker who has ever considered switching, here's an easy guide to low 'tar' and nicotine cigarettes.

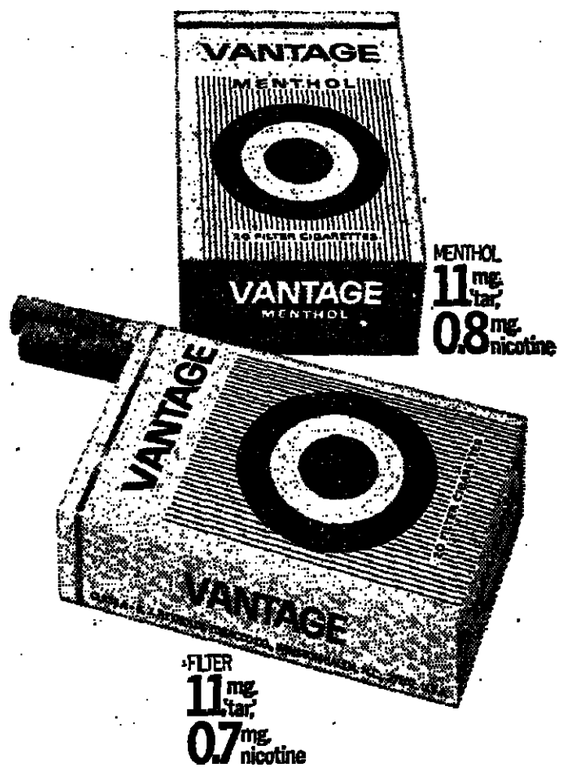
First, there are super low, low 'tar' and nicotine cigarettes. They're fine if low numbers are all you want. Because their scientific filters work so well, they filter out most of the taste.

Next. The low 'tar' and nicotine cigarettes that claim to deliver flavor. If you've ever tasted one of them, you've probably been disappointed. Empty of promises and empty of taste. That's what these cigarettes are often made of.

Finally, there's Vantage. The low 'tar' and nicotine cigarette that's different from all the others.

Vantage isn't a watered down version of a cigarette. Because from the very beginning, Vantage was specially designed to deliver flavor like a full flavor cigarette. Without anywhere near the 'tar' and nicotine.

So if you'd like to switch to a low 'tar' and nicotine cigarette, try Vantage first. You might save yourself a lot of searching. Because Vantage will probably turn out to be the only low 'tar' and nicotine cigarette you'll enjoy smoking.



Warning: The Surgeon General Has Determined That Cigarette Smoking Is Dangerous to Your Health.

FILTER: 11 mg. "tar", 0.7 mg. nicotine, MENTHOL: 11 mg. "tar", 0.8 mg. nicotine, av. per cigarette, FTC Report APR. '76.

As Rosh ha-Shanah Approaches, Plight of World Jews Is Stressed

By IRVING SPIEGEL

The plight of Soviet Jews and the precarious position of Israel in the Middle East were stressed by Jewish leaders at the approach of Rosh ha-Shanah, the Jewish New Year, 5737.

Jews throughout the world begin the holiday next Friday at sundown. It lasts through sundown Sunday.

The event marks the beginning of a 10-day period of introspection and prayer that culminates with Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement. Orthodox Jews and Conservative Jews observe Rosh ha-Shanah for two days and Reform Jews for one day.

During the period, the most solemn on the Jewish religious calendar, Jews exchange the Hebrew greeting "L'Shanah tova tikateyvu" ("May you be inscribed for a good life"), a reference to the Biblical image of the Divine Book of Life.

Rabbi Walter Wurzburger, the president of the Rabbinical Council of America, the Orthodox body, called for a renewal and reaffirmation "of the spiritual values which the New Year brings to us." He urged the "free world nations not to bow to the blackmail of the oil-rich Arab nations."

In a similar appeal, Harold M. Jacobs, the president of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, called on the "world community to join Jews in paying and seeking for the foundations of a lasting peace."

Rabbi Alexander Schindler, the president of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, in a reference to hijacking and terrorism, said, "The barter of innocents for criminals is a moral abomination which must be registered with full and united force."

Other leaders emphasized Rosh ha-Shanah's meaning of democratic ideals and principles. This theme was conveyed by Rabbi Stanley Rabinowitz, the president of the Rabbinical Assembly, the Conservative body. He said Jews "must make common cause with decent people of all faiths and all nations to broaden the blessings of democracy."

Bernice S. Tannenbaum, the president of Hadassah, the women's Zionist organization, voiced the prayer that the Jewish New Year, "will usher in a new era where people will seek harmony, instead of an exchange of bullets."

Elmer L. Winter, the president of the American Jewish Committee, expressed concern for Soviet Jews. He said more than 100,000 had applied to leave Russia but "had not been allowed." He said many were "subject to loss of employment and other deprivations."

Robert Abrams, the chairman of the Greater New York Conference of Soviet Jewry, and Eugene Gold, the chairman of the National Conference of Soviet Jewry, called on Soviet leaders to permit Jews to immigrate to the nation of their choice.

Official at Green Haven Prison Is Shifted After Inmate Strike

STORMVILLE, N.Y., Sept. 18 (AP)— The state's Department of Correctional Services has transferred Green Haven State Prison's chief of security, but it denies the move is connected to a recent prisoner strike.

A department spokesman said yesterday that Capt. Hylan T. Sperbeck, a veteran correction officer and the acting deputy superintendent for security at the prison, was being transferred to Bayview Correctional Facility in New York City, effective next Thursday.

Mr. Sperbeck has been at Green Haven since July 1975.

Among grievances presented by striking prisoners earlier this month was one stating: "It is felt that the attitude and presence of Captain Sperbeck creates a hazard to the health and well-being of the entire inmate population, and that his removal and replacement will go a long way in relieving inmate-officer misunderstanding and conflict."

Synthesizer Duo and Computer Evoke Music's Sensuous Side

By JOHN ROCKWELL

The downtown new-music season got under way officially Friday night with two interesting concerts of electronic music—Ear Food, a live synthesizer duo at Environ, 476 Broadway, and Laurie Spiegel's computer music as the beginning of a new late-night weekend series of contemporary concerts at the American Theater Laboratory, 219 West 19th Street.

Synthesizers, computers and their assorted electronic brethren still elicit brooding suspicion among many music-lovers. The whole notion of a music made by machine is humanistically anathema to some, and others find synthesized music somehow "unnatural"—which, of course, it is.

But Friday's two concerts, for all their dissimilarities, reaffirmed a couple of things about this new and still very young medium. One is that the colors and sound-shapes at composers' command through electronic means are capable of the most varied sensuous delights. The other is that composers, electronic and otherwise, are continuing in their steady rejection of the highly chromatic pointillism so popular just a few years ago.

The more impressive of the two concerts was Miss Spiegel's. Trained in the most approved manner and the recipient of many grants and commissions, Miss Spiegel at the age of 30 is fast emerging as one of our most promising electronic composers.

Her work on Friday ranged from an illusion of continuous acceleration to a xylophonish rhythmic study to an extremely pretty and pleasing contrapuntal effort, full of quick-moving independent parts, to two longer, more meditative pieces. These last were both less immediately clear from a formal standpoint and more mystically involving as sheer sound, yet neither lapsed into sheer wallowing in effects.

Ear Food consists of Dana McCurdy, who is 24, and Brian Flahive, 27. Mr. McCurdy has done extensive work in commercial music, programming synthesizer tracks for the likes of Roberta Flack and Dizzy Gillespie, and teaches synthesizer at the New School; he and Mr. Flahive, who is also a graphic artist, have collaborated as Ear Food for nearly two years.

What the two do is manipulate their two ARP synthesizers, their Electrocomp synthesizer, a tape recorder and ancillary odd percussive effects in the service of mostly precomposed, partly improvised music.

The pieces on Friday—this observer had to miss the last two in order to get to Miss Spiegel's concert—betrayed a quite remarkable range of idiom and mood, from popsy sound-effect collages to modal mood-pieces to cutsey-poo gimmicks to jazzish interactions.

It was all pretty facile; only one piece, "5 A.M.," struck this listener as coherent and evocative enough to be really attractive. But binding it all together was a wonderful grabbag of exotic sounds, a real facility in bending the synthesizers to lively effects and a demonstrable love of these frisky new sound-making toys.

Stylistics Confronted by Mishaps

It takes professionalism to overcome obstacles of the sort that confronted Stylistics at their Felt Forum show Friday. Russell Thompkins, whose plangent high tenor is the group's lead voice, was limping about the stage, his right foot in a cast. Aarion Love, the Stylistic's second lead, walked to the lip of the stage to sing "The Way We Were" and, as the houselights went down, he walked too far and fell into the audience.

Worst of all, the public-address system's monitor speakers, which allow performers to hear themselves onstage, were malfunctioning, and some of the group's harmonies were out of tune as a result. But the five Stylistics carried on, and the audience's recognition of their hits—a melodic bunch of sweet soul ballads—ended up being as warm as any reaction this reviewer has seen.

The Stylistics represent the sleeker, easy listening side of black pop, but Double Exposure, which preceded them at the Felt Forum show, is a grittier, more gospelish group. The problematic monitors and a malfunctioning vocal microphone gave them trouble, but Double Exposure was impressive nonetheless. The four-man group seems to have combined the slick trappings of the Philadelphia sound with a preaching intensity reminiscent of Sam and Dave.

The Salsoul Orchestra, a large group of Philadelphia session musicians led by a veteran arranger named Vince Montana, opened the Stylistics concert with a series of lushly orchestrated but driving dance numbers.

ROBERT PALMER

Alan Vanzo Sings 'Faust' Stylishly

The Paris Opéra's unusual, not to say peculiar, production of "Faust" was given two performances at the Metropolitan Opera House. And in the second, on Friday night, there was a new tenor in the title role. He was Alain Vanzo, a native of Monte Carlo and French trained, who had not previously sung on New York's opera's stage.

He was of definite value to the performance. He had an ingratiating voice, which he handled, for the most part, with ease. He sang with style, particularly in his famous garden-scene aria, "Salut! Demeure chaste et pure." He managed some fine high pianissimos that were just this side of sounding falsetto. If the direction did not require any acting of him, Mr. Vanzo at least cut a decent stage figure. Relatively short, he has a large, well-shaped head that oddly resembled the familiar portrait of Mozart.

New Jersey Chamber Symphony Has Ambitious New York Debut

The Chamber Symphony of New Jersey, which made its New York debut at Carnegie Recital Hall last Sunday night, has much in its favor. The playing is vigorous and rhythmically alive, the conducting is spirited and sensitive to the basic of 18th-century style, and the programming is more imaginative than it would have to be.

The group was founded by G. L. Nair, its conductor, in 1973, and has its headquarters in Metuchen. Like many less-than-top-line ensembles of this sort, the biggest weakness is in the strings, and string sound dominates most of this repertory, particularly that from the 18th century. At decent cohesion, pitch and tone.

But if they aren't adequately prepared, the sound fragments abrasively, and such was the case with the opening Locatelli "Introduttione teatrale" in D (Op. 4, No. 5) and Mozart Divertimento in F (K. 138) on Sunday.

Matters improved with Bach's wedding Cantata, "Weichet nur, betrübte Schatten" (BMV 202). The strings sounded more secure, and the ensemble's excellent wind players had a chance at last—Joshua Siegel, oboe, and Randolph Haviland, bassoon. In addition, the soprano soloist, Peggy Pruett, offered a small-scaled but otherwise nicely bright and mellow bit of singing, complete with an easy trill.

Repertory for chamber orchestras tends to divide between the 18th and 20th centuries, and such was the case on Sunday. Debussy's "Danses sacrée et profane" went by smoothly, with Marjorie Mollenauer as the harp soloist, and Norman Dello Joio's Lyric Fantasies for viola and string orchestra sounded at least inoffensive—Alice Lindsay was the rather shaky viola soloist here. The concert ended with Hindemith's Five Pieces for String Orchestra (Op. 44, No. 4), attractive music attractively dispatched.

JOHN ROCKWELL

David Barron in Americana

Though Charles Ives is not primarily known as a composer for voice, his best songs may be as impressive as anything he undertook, combining the brawny poetry of his symphonies and sonatas with a real flair for structure and concision. Certainly the Ives songs that David Barron sang last Tuesday night at Carnegie Recital Hall—a set of five ranging from the stunning repose of "The Housatonic at Stockbridge" to the boiserous patriotism of "Old Home Day"—were the high point of his "Evening of American Songs."

Otherwise, Mr. Barron's program concentrated on the likes of John C. Baker, Arthur Farwell, Henry Russell and John Whitaker. Dating from the 19th and early 20th centuries, their music for the most part moved unassuming, genteel, sentimental and utterly delightful.

Of particular interest were three songs by John Philip Sousa. "Blue Ridge! I'm Coming Back to You" was rousing in the familiar Sousa style. But "In Flanders Fields the Poppies Grow" was a grim tribute to fallen soldiers: And "Smick, Smack, Smuck" celebrated the unlikely intensity of one young man's first kiss—"We kept it up more than a week/Until her teeth came through her cheek" (the lyrics are Sousa's own).

Mr. Barron, who is currently preparing a volume of American vocal music, possesses a light bass-baritone with a shallow bottom. On this occasion, his New York recital debut, his inventive programming, lively presence and splendid enunciation were more to the point. Both Mr. Barron and Neely Bruce, his accompanist, were at their best in the Ives songs, where it mattered most.

JOSEPH HOROWITZ

Hugo Goldenzweig, Pianist

Hugo Goldenzweig, a pianist from Argentina presently living in New York City and teaching at the Turtle Bay Music School, made his formal concert debut Friday night at Carnegie Recital Hall.

With one exception, the Sonata No. 1 by the contemporary Welsh composer William Mathias, Mr. Goldenzweig's program consisted of sturdy staples from the keyboard repertory: a sonata by Haydn, Mozart's Fantasy in C minor and a group of short pieces by Chopin and Brahms.

Perhaps Mr. Goldenzweig's sympathies lie with the modern school, for the Mathias Sonata, in its United States premiere, proved to be the most satisfying performance of the evening. Couched in a conservative idiom but harmonically lean and full of attractive rhythmic and melodic ideas, the piece received a sharply profiled and warmly committed interpretation.

In the more familiar works, Mr. Goldenzweig left a more unsettled impression, almost as if he were wholly detached from the music. Technical matters were generally under good control, and the pianist elucidated textures crisply and cleanly. The Mozart and Haydn pieces, however, tended to proceed in fits and starts, while the Chopin-Brahms portion of the program sounded too remote and monochromatic.

PETER G. DAVIS

Dance: The Mobius Company

By DON McDONAGH

The sense of puzzlement aroused by Mobius, a company of skilled dancers and limited creativity was epitomized in a dance called "Really, Really (Truly) Really" on Friday evening at 579 Broadway. It was technically demanding, mysteriously self-involved and ultimately vacuous.

The trio of women, Sarah Rebecca Elgart, Anne Marie Maragni, and Bryn Alison McCornack followed a program of movement that brought them together, burst them asunder and ended with Miss McCornack dropping white paper discs in her wake as she exited. The interaction of the three was as close to random activity as any devotee of chance could hope for and the effect was about as chaotic. The dancers flashed earnestly and eagerly through the limited phrases of the piece as if hoping that it might all add up to something, but it never did. The energy was expended for its own sake and remained as mute testimony to effort desperately seeking vindication.

In "Ice," the choreographer Michael J. Sullivan designed a duet for himself and Miss Elgart to the raw sounds of wolf howlings. At times their scrabbling with paw-like hands and feet suggested four-legged predators, but their ultimate squabbling was more like a domestic quarrel than life in the wild.

"Flags," which opened the program, paired Miss Elgart and Miss Maragni in a little world of tentative approaches and inevitable isolation that just seemed to happen, rather than evolve. But then the whole program suffered from a surfeit of beautifully articulated happenstance.

Margie Gillis Dances

Soft country and western music, declaimed verse and an occasional scream accompanied Margie Gillis's dances Thursday evening at Appelby Studio. It was a solo program of raw emotional expression without much intervening craft.

Miss Gillis is a strong dancer whose security and clearly launched gestures underline a happy physicality. Her arms, in particular, have a purposeful bent that expresses gentleness and firmness without bombast. She turned easily and melted from one position to another with utter confidence. For the most part though, as the choreographer of the program, she gave herself, as the performer, little artistic support.

The six solos had a stylistic similarity that made them blur into virtually one long dance. "Woman, La Lune" did have a cloak and in "Words" she recited and "The Dream" was torn by shrieks, but the quality of the movement was so much the same that it hardly reflected the various titles of the solos.

"Sombrero Sunday" and "Love Song," which opened and closed the program, respectively, both showed a surging lyricism that could be Miss Gillis's strongest quality if it were disciplined and expressed with a larger gestural vocabulary.

Miron Yampolsky, Cellist, in Debut

Miron Yampolsky, a Russian cellist who studied with Mstislav Rostropovich for 16 years, then emigrated to Israel in 1972 and to this country in 1974, where he is now assistant principal cellist of the Baltimore Symphony, made his New York recital debut at Alice Tully Hall on Thursday night. With Jeffrey Chappell at the piano, he played a Frescobaldi Toccata, Beethoven's Sonata No. 2 in G minor, Schumann's Pieces in Folk Style, Rachmaninoff's Vocalise, Shostakovich's Sonata (Op. 40) and a Stravinsky arrangement of a ballet pas de deux.

When his playing was at its best, Mr. Yampolsky produced shapely phrases in which relatively small-scaled tone was inflected to produce affecting shadings of dynamics. Variations of color and mood, however, were seldom striking, even in compositions of widely differing styles.

Unfortunately, the cellist's performances were uneven, and passage of pleasing quality were too often followed by those in which squeaky tones, pitch vagaries or other flaws intruded. This rather erratic cello-playing contrasted sharply with Mr. Chappell's piano-playing, which was a model of smoothness and authority.

ALLEN HUGHES

Frederick Draper in Debut

If nothing else, Frederick Draper has an engaging stage personality. In his debut appearance in Carnegie Recital Hall last Thursday night he enlivened the program with amusing comments in a style not normally associated with sober-minded guitarists (Julian Bream is an exception). A product of several teachers, including Segovia, José Rey de la Torre and Michael Lorimer, Mr. Draper now performs and teaches in and around New York.

As a guitarist he has agility and accurate pitch. For certain quieter, atmospheric pieces, such as his transcription of Mussorgsky's "The Old Castle" from "Pictures at an Exhibition" and Villa Lobos's popular Prelude No. 1, the playing was excellent, colorful and expressive. Otherwise, there were limitations to Mr. Draper's art. Fast figurations were not always evenly articulated and there were other minor technical problems. Stylistically, the guitarist stretched out 16th- and 17th-century pieces so that it was hard to perceive their shape, while Bach's music was slightly romanticized.

RAYMOND ERICSON

Andrea Marsavonian, Pianist

Andrea Marsavonian made her New York recital debut last Sunday afternoon at Carnegie Recital Hall in a dual capacity: as a pianist and composer. At the keyboard she proved to be a capable if not completely finished technician and a straightforward, occasionally stolid interpreter.

In a program of familiar pieces by Bach, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Chopin and Liszt, Miss Marsavonian demonstrated a fair amount of finger agility, but less ability to characterize the music through phrase pointing, rhythmic elasticity and shades of color. As a result, near everything tended to sound much the same.

As a composer for piano, Miss Marsavonian writes in an eclectic style that draws heavily on late romantic spirits such as Liszt, Rachaninoff and Soriabin—rolling accompanimental figuration, juicy harmonies and a rather aimless rhapsodic melodic line. Despite its diverse subject matter ("Karma Rhapsody," "Manhattan Montage," "I, the Child," etc.) and pleasant romantic associations, her music seems to be limited in emotional scope and variety.

Mood Over Rules These Days

By BERNADINE MORRIS

Resort fashions are emerging as a kaleidoscope of vibrant or muted colors, swirling skirts and tiny waistlines, strapless necklines and halters, with the clean-cut look of American sportswear sandwiched amid the outpouring of romantic designs.

Long ago, it seems, women gave up feeling they all had to wear their skirts the same length. Even longer ago, designers gave up insisting that everyone think pink, or green, or yellow at the same moment.

Today, the liberation extends to the shape of clothes. Almost every designer includes a loose dress on the order of a chemise in his collection, along with a loose shirt-like top and a pair of pants. By the same token, almost everyone shows a number of full skirts in the crisp silk usually called sibilant or in cotton.

So you pick the shape of your clothes, along with their color, according to your mood—you cinch your waist or ignore it—and everybody hopes that the days of uniform dressing are past.

Bill Blass remains an exponent of the tailored look, showing his share of pin-striped suits or blazers with pants, but at the same time he's still got a mean eye for a ruffle.

Even his tailored clothes have a touch of softness about them—his pin-striped suits are in red and white, instead of navy and white. The cashmere camisole top of a striped evening dress is sybaritic and also in red, but that doesn't mean red is the only color. There are plenty of others. Purple and yellow and pink and navy. The navy shows up mainly in taffeta, with spiraling tiers or pleated underskirt and it's Mr. Blass's low-keyed version of the romantic look.

Herbert Kasper, who was elected to fashion's Hall of Fame this year, remains an eclectic, mixing elaborately bouffant dresses with sleekly clinging ones for Joan Leslie. Besides his peasant dresses—petticoats prop their bouffant skirts—he shows slim white ones.

Besides stiff taffeta, he shows supple crepes.

Sophisticated sheaths alternate with ingenue checked cottons.

It's a difficult time for women who insist on being told what to wear.

Richard Assatly, in his collection for Gino-Snow, a company that is not yet a year old, made one of the most perceptive fashion discoveries. It happens to be the age-old truth that when colorful clothes are rampant, a woman can attract a lot of attention in black and white.

So while he adroitly touches a lot of other bases, his most devastating clothes happen to be white silk shirts mated with black taffeta skirts. It's a combination to keep in mind.

Albert Capraro's major revelation is the power of all white dresses, some long, some short, all wickedly demure with eyelet edgings, lace insertions, even head scarves.

But remember, it's not the time for one-note collections. So Mr. Capraro, who is one of Betty Ford's favorite designers, and whose company is called Jerry Guttenberg, shows a generous assortment of aproned peasant dresses, tiered taffeta styles and paisley chiffons in very muted colors. He mixes his prints, shows quilted jackets, and has quite a few bright red dresses. But don't get misled. It's not a one-color season.

Miss Lindsay Plans Wedding

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Van Cleef Lindsay of London and Syosset, L.I., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Cameron Lindsay, to John Barton Warkentin, owner and operator of the Steamboat Village Ski Shop in Steamboat Springs, Colo.

Miss Lindsay, a graduate of the Tante Marie School of Cookery in Woking, England, has a catering business in Steamboat Springs. She and her fiancé, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Suderman Warkentin of Fort Worth, Tex., plan to be married on Nov. 6 in Cold Spring Harbor, L.I.

The bride-to-be, whose father is executive vice president of the Morgan Guaranty Trust Company of New York, is a niece of former Mayor John V. Lindsay. At Last, the Complete 'Porgy and Bess'

By FREDERICK S. ROFFMAN

Shortly after he had started composing "Porgy and Bess," George Gershwin was buttonholed by Leonard Liebling in a crowded theater lobby. What, demanded the editor of the Musical Courier, was the character of this new project that was keeping Gershwin so busy. "American, of course, in the modern idiom," replied Gershwin, "but just the same a cross between 'Meistersinger' and 'Madame Butterfly.' And then with a mischievous smile, he added, "Are those models good enough?"

To many of Gershwin's contemporaries, the idea of depicting Catfish Row and its black inhabitants in grand opera terms was absurd—certainly too difficult for a 1930's audience to accept. And so Gershwin's vision was whittled and rearranged until it coincided with the prevailing concept of Broadway musical theater. But Gershwin refused to surrender the hope that someday audiences would be able to hear "Porgy and Bess" as he originally conceived it. The Sherwin M. Goldman Houston Grand Opera production that opens Tuesday at the Uris Theater marks the first theatrical presentation of the score virtually as Gershwin wrote it.

Like Arthur Sullivan and Victor Herbert, the more successful Gershwin became as a composer for the popular theater the more he longed to write a serious opera. Early in his career, "Blue Monday," a 20-minute verismo "blues opera," set in a Harlem nightclub, was part of George White's "Scandals of 1922"—for one performance that is. Although it had attracted favorable critical opinion, White thought the piece was too gloomy for a musical revue and cut it from the show. Later, Paul Whiteman programmed the opera as part of a 1925 Carnegie Hall concert. Retitled "135th Street," it generated a lukewarm response. Gershwin's grasp of form was still immature in 1922, and "135th Street" is really a series of songs, loosely strung together by recitatives that only hint at the tightly integrated sung dialogues of "Porgy and Bess."

When Gershwin read DuBose Heyward's novel "Porgy" in a single, sleepless night in 1926, the triangle of the crippled, black beggar Porgy, the powerful stevedore Crown, and the beautiful Bess struck him as perfect material for an opera. He immediately wrote to Heyward, who lived in Charleston, South Carolina, asking him if he would be interested in a e is a Paris most of us have never seen but t remains nevertheless fixed in our minds re vividly than many things we have ob- ved at first-hand—an image compounded poetry and old movies, of certain novels l paintings and what, in that distant era phy entered the college curriculum as a n study, were known as dirty postcards. "It is a world," Corbière declared in his poem "—this Parisian world, or underworld, now he Styx to which Corbière compared it, that Baudelaire and Maupassant, in Degas's nd the young Picasso, and in those movies in ent and unjust fate is about to overtake Jean Simon in seedy circumstances.

d bounded by the illicit and the nocturnal— criminal, gay, desperate, lonely and often e in every respect but one of the bourgeois ability: for it is, in its way, also a hard- of business.

hotographer of this lost world was Brassaï, t with an unmistakable relish and yet ob- th special combination of detachment, excitement and empathy we feel in an artist who has discovered his true métier. His pictures of Parisian nightlife in the 1930's—now the subject of a large exhibition at the Marlborough Gallery, 40 West 57th Street (through Oct. 16)—are remarkable in many respects, but most remarkable, perhaps, for their complete lack of anything resembling sentimentality. Often humorous, frequently stark, always shrouded in the atmosphere of the surreptitious, Brassaï's pictures of whores and hoodlums and homosexual hangouts, of bars and cabarets and opium dens and street life, are never merely picturesque. Shunning all temptations to romance, they give us an unforgettable account of the mundane routine in lives given over to low-life vocations and pastimes. In some of these pictures, indeed, especially the brothel scenes, the only discernible emotion is that of boredom, and beauty is remarkable for its scarcity. Yet this is clearly a world that Brassaï adored, and it is in this curious mixture of love and benign detachment that these pictures have their peculiar power.

Brassaï, born Gyula Halász in the town of Brassov, in Transylvania, in 1899—he adopted the name of his birthplace as his own—had originally intended to become a painter. Even before going to Paris in 1924, he had known Kandinsky in Berlin and frequented that city's avant-garde milieu. In Paris he worked as a journalist, writing for Hungarian papers, and it was not until 1929, when he was 30, that he took up photography at the suggestion of his friend, André Kertész.

He was in his 30's, then, when he entered upon his special mission as a photographer, gaining access to a society suspicious of outsiders, and becoming something of an insider himself. In the book that Brassaï has now written about this period—"The Secret Paris of the 30's" (Pan-

Napoleon, I've met my Waterloo," he says, kneeling in front of her.

"You know, a lot of people didn't want me to play this role," said Williams, who was wearing a tan shirt, blue jeans and a small gold chain around his neck. "They thought because of the 'black Clark Gable' thing, I wasn't serious enough, that I was a personality. But I think I'm one of the few actors who can play the role. It requires an actor who is into all those esoteric, spiritual, cosmic places. Dr. King understood the connection between the political, the moral and the spiritual, and I think I do, too.

"Back in 1964, I got involved with a Buddhist woman who helped me understand those things, through Eastern philosophy and Western philosophy, everything from Buddhism to Jung. She was my first teacher. She was an ex-addict and an ex-prostitute who had gone through so much, and she pulled herself out of it, and helped me, too. I had a sense of desperation during the 60's because I couldn't get any parts; I was either too dark or too light. Once I even put my head under a sunlamp to try to make myself darker, and all I got was a bad sunburn. There were lots of problems during those years for people who have a lot of mongrel, like me."

Williams, who two years ago turned down a screen version of Dr. King's life written by Abby Mann, said higher forces had "directed" him to do the stage version. "I went to an Armenian lady in California who reads tarot cards and coffee grounds," he said. "She said, 'I keep seeing this thing you're going to do, a religious leader leading thousands of people.' She told me the same thing when I went back six months later. Then my agent, Shelly Burger, came to me with the play and said I had to do it, and he's really all big bucks and very cynical. That, to me, was some sort of sign.

"There were other signs, too. My picture appeared on Ebony magazine; next to a headline about a Dr. King story that said, 'Monument to a Martyr.' And Dr. King was 39 years old when he was killed and I had my 39th birthday on the day the play opened in Washington. So I've always regarded this whole experience as something I had to do, a calling. I really believe I'm surrounded by fantastic spirits and positive voices that guide and direct me."

Does he have any objections that a white man, Robert Greenwald, conceived and directed "I Have a Dream," which is described as "a musical evening based on the words and writings of the late civil rights leader"?

"Oh, no," Williams quickly replied, "he directed 'Me and Bessie' on Broadway, and he knows what he's doing. He's a very good director, a very fine director, and being young, he doesn't have a lot of cliches. And a lot of black people don't understand black people, you know."

When asked to describe his creative process, Williams, who studied the Method system, replied: "Whatever I feel at the moment is the way I go. I came out of the Stanislavsky school, but I don't use it today. I go in any direction I want to go. I take whatever's happening to me in any given day, and I take that moment. If I feel sad one day, I take that feeling into what I'm doing, and that takes me into another feeling. The whole thing is to be in tune, and that's what I'm doing."

Sometimes in preparing for a part, Williams said he thinks of James Cagney and/or Bette Davis for inspiration. "Both of them were able to create characters that weren't always likable," he said, "but somehow the audience was always able to relate to those characters, and find redeeming qualities in them, and feel them and like them and go with them."

Billy Dee Williams and his twin sister, Loretta, were born in Harlem on April 6, 1937, to a mother who had dreams of becoming an opera singer and a father who supported the family working as a cook and janitor. The twins grew up on 110th Street between Fifth and Lenox Avenues, in a neighborhood he describes as "a red light district."

Williams was able to survive the ghetto, he said, "because my family always had an interest in education and culture, and my sister and I were always painting since we were very young. I played ball and hung out with the guys on the street, but unlike my friends, I was always stepping in and stepping out."

Williams, who first appeared on Broadway at the age of 7 in Kurt Weill's "The Firebrand of Florence," later attended the High School of Music and Art and then the National Academy of Fine Arts and Design. He toyed with the idea of becoming a portrait painter, but gave it up at the age of 24 after he received good notices as the sailor in the Broadway play, "A Taste of Honey."

In his latest film, "The Bingo Long Traveling All-Stars and Motor Kings," a surprise summer hit about the black baseball leagues of the 1930's, Williams plays the prototype of the legendary black pitcher, Satchel Paige. The film is strictly entertainment, but Williams thinks it has some value, too.

"It shows a part of history that many people don't know anything about," he said, "and that's valuable. It also talks about Uncle Tomming, and shows why it was done—all because of survival."

He thinks his upcoming TV movie about Scott Joplin, the black turn-of-the-century composer of ragtime music, will also have "historical value." "It's all there," he said, "his struggle, and the fact he had to work in a bordello to survive, and how he died of syphilis because there was no cure in those days. As a rule I don't do television anymore, but when I read the script, I thought it was beautiful and I wanted to do it."

Williams said he hoped to do more historical movie roles, notably Haile Selassie of Ethiopia, Alexander Pushkin, the Russian poet who was half black, Hannibal and King Solomon "and other great classical figures who have never been done by men of my hue."

Although Williams doesn't quite have the lofty lifestyle one might expect from "the black Clark Gable"—he says he is a loner who lives in a "modest" four-bedroom ranch-style home in Hollywood with his third wife, Teruko, and their three children—he does like to be described in that manner.

"I didn't look for it, but I enjoy it," he said, flashing a dazzling movie star smile. "It tells you what's happening to the world, and how a lot of thinking has changed. The fact that I, a black man, can emerge as a matinee idol in films is quite a step. It's nice to know that young black and white kids can relate to me the way I used to relate to Alan Ladd and all those guys."

[The D]anger of [Sh]eltered [Pro]ductions

[T]heatrical workshops, stashed away in [...] stones, garages, lofts and church base[ments ...] [h]ave multiplied felicitously and even [...]r, taking over almost entirely for a [...]ff Broadway, I'd like to offer play[wrights a]pproaching them a handy rule of [...] double-pronged rule: (a) Use the [...]worth; (b) Don't fall in love with it. [...]orkshop is by this time obvious, and [...]e embryonic productions have flow[...]ble operations. Everyone remembers [L]anford Wilson's "Hot L Baltimore" [...] weekend beginnings, the nation is at [...]d with duplicate productions of "A [...]th on Broadway has just this week [...]he Public-born "For Colored Girls," [...]portedly getting ready to receive a [...]uscaloosa's Calling Me." What starts [...] in the whole world's lap.

[...]ortant—up to a point—is the 12[...]at never does go anywhere else, [...]ight's head for corrections. Anyone [...] the theater has got to hear what his [...] theater. The line that he loved on [...]ake him cringe as he stands at the [...] and shares it with—hears it with—[...] people. The author who has done [...] assembled audience doesn't believe, [...]ion, stripped naked on the spot. He [...] and in a hurry to go home and set [...]

[...]udience needs to groan, titter inap[...]e vocalize its dissatisfaction. It can [...] The writer will still pick up the [...]trasensory perception, by the simple [...] his fellows and begins to respond [...]nly satisfactory way to learn, and [...]hat the year after tomorrow there [...]roducers' desks—scripts worthy of [...] and onto the stage—has got to be [...] development.

[...] caution, it's because of two things I've noticed, two things not immediately related. The first is this. On several recent occasions playwrights have specified that their plays must be done in workshop situations—even when more completely professional productions were open to them. During my visit to the Performing Garage on Wooster Street, where Steve Gooch's "Female Transport" will be playing its final performances this week, I was informed that Mr. Gooch, having had some success with his piece in a tiny London house, had turned down offers from commercial producers and insisted on an intimate, remote, low-risk mounting. And within the week I came across a casual note in the press indicating that Roger L. Stevens, in Washington, was doing yet another play not in the Kennedy Center, where he'd like to have put it, but in a miniature house especially leased for the occasion. Again the author had insisted.

Well, good enough. A playwright has got to mature at his own idiosyncratic rate, and sometimes it's plain common sense to keep small work in small environments, safely away from demands it doesn't mean to meet yet. No writer has to tangle with a thousand listeners in a thousand seats, or with the economic pressures that start up the minute a stage (all that scenery) or the auditorium (all that overhead) gets larger. Not until he's ready for it, braced, ripened, reasonably confident.

Mr. Gooch, for instance, is undoubtedly wise to continue circling the fringes for a while. His "Female Transport" has to do with six shackled women in the sunless hold of a convict ship carrying them to Australia in 1815. Though it contains effectively managed scenes—a newly shipped sailor lad wanting to ask one of the manacled girls for sex but sorely abashed by the eternal presence of five onlookers—it is a virtual catalogue of stock slave-ship images. The bloodied lass who has taken 26 lashes on her back; the storm at sea that sets the lot of them reeling dangerously (the director has kept them all on their feet so that they can reel, proving that there is indeed a storm raging above, though most of them would seem to have intelligence enough to get down on the floor and anchor themselves to the fixed bedposts); the morose member of the group who hangs herself during the night; the impoverished doctor who'd like to insist upon more humane treatment but who can be bribed to silence. And, at the moment, the play lacks a center of emotional interest, an omission that robs it of its possible suspense. Any other six women would have done as well. In all likelihood, "Female Transport" will retain its workshop standing, while Mr. Gooch goes on to write another and—let us hope—fresher play.

There is, however, a danger in contenting oneself with what may be called sheltered productions. A writer can freeze himself at the tryout, or small-audience, or not-quite-developed level, protecting himself from the slings and arrows of larger confrontations, persuading himself that so long as he is producing material for what finally becomes a coterie audience, he is growing. Undoubtedly he is growing, for a given length of time—an indeterminate length of time, since it is, as I've said, different for each man and woman. The trick is to know when you've hit it, when it's time to get out and go to the mat with more complex materials, the more complex reactions of great big audiences, the demands of full-scale, no-allowances-made theater.

I'm stressing the point today because we've spent so much time lately asking ourselves whatever happened to the so promising young writers of the 1950's and 60's, only a few of whom have hitched up their shoulders, forcibly added cubits to their stature, and resoundingly delivered what was expected of them. Just a few weeks ago Elenore Lester was raising the issue again in these columns, running through the possible answers—the strongest of which was that Broadway, the "big" theater, remains steadfastly inhos-

Schneider: "Theater unites people"

'Trilogy' Director

"Knights of the White Magnolia" and "The Oldest Living Graduate," Schneider said, are both set in 1962 and explore the decline of traditional Southwestern culture. "Knights" depicts the final get-together of the aged members of a fading patriotic order, "Graduates" dramatizes the clash between a World War I veteran and his cynically calculating son. "Today we are examining ourselves as never before," Schneider continued. "People are asking, 'What happened to America?'—the dream, the spirit. In these plays, Preston is letting us experience esthetically what happened, where we made the wrong choices, where our values went wrong.

"These are marvelously truthful and human works. Look at some of the other plays drawing audiences in New York. 'Streamers'—it rocks people, whether you like David Rabe as a playwright or not. The same is true of 'For Colored Girls.' Or 'A Chorus Line'—we're not all members of a chorus line, obviously, but something moves us in that show—the ring of truth.

Schneider, a prime exponent of the avant-garde in the theater of the 60's—including numerous works by Beckett and Pinter—says his commitment to the naturalistic mode of "A Texas Trilogy" does not really signal a shift in his directorial taste. "People are always trying to type me," he observed. "But no playwright I've ever dealt with has ever said anything to me other than 'This is a realistic play'—Ionesco, Beckett, Pinter, Tennessee Williams or Preston Jones—all are somehow painting life. The strokes may be those of Gauguin or van Gogh or Picasso or Kline—the textures are different—but they're all trying to get to the essence of life. No playwright sets out to be avant-garde or existentialist or absurdist. He writes about his vision of life.

"Which is not to say that the avant-garde is dead—it just keeps changing, keeps moving in cycles. I think 'A Texas Trilogy' is avant-garde in that it's restoring to us something we had before, and lost, some fundamentel perceptions about ourselves and our myths. In a lecture recently, the psychologist Rollo May said that our myths—our spiritual essence—are our greatest reality, laying bare the soul of our society. According to May, the myths contained in our art are the only thing that can save our civilization from decline."

Isn't the success of Jones's trilogy somehow related to the recent surge of interest in the lifestyles and values of the South and West, from country and western music to CeeBee radio to the rise of Jimmy Carter? "It's true that Preston does come from the so-called Sunbelt," Schneider mused, "but I don't see this regional shift as terribly cosmic. More to the point is that, in theater, the whole pattern has changed. No serious play has come to Broadway over the past several years without having been tried out elsewhere first, whether in New Haven or Washington, D.C., or at Joe Papp's Public Theater.

"Today, Broadway is just too expensive to fool around with. Where once shows traveled from New York to the regions, now they come from the regions to New York. At this point, I think all theater is regional—New York is just one of the regions. The growth of theater outside of New York is not only inevitable, it is necessary, because it is making theater part of our national consciousness."

A very important part, according to Schneider, who took his Arena stage production of "Our Town" on a successful tour of the Soviet Union in 1974. "The theater unites people in one place on one evening in a way that no other art form—movies or ballet or painting—can do. It brings us together with a sense of what it's like to be here at this particular time. Our major problem with theater is that we're so fragmented—as a country, as a society, as individual members of an audience—that it takes a lot of emotional cement to unite us."

Cement which, Schneider said, a work like Edward Albee's "Virginia Woolf" provided in the 60's. (Schneider won a Tony for his staging of that play in 1962)—"making an entire audience face truths about marriage it had never faced before." The experience, he said, has been provided all too rarely on Broadway of late. "I saw a hit New York show the other night—it doesn't matter which one—and half the audience was asleep. The wives had to wake up the husbands at intermission. This is something you almost always see at 'popular' plays.

"I think Broadway audiences are ready and waiting for plays that will reach them. Out-of-town audiences have felt that they have seen their lives onstage in the trilogy. Isn't that what theater is supposed to do? Preston is called a regional playwright by some, but he's regional only in the sense that he has no intention of moving to New York. Most playwrights can be called regional. Tennessee Williams is from St. Louis. Arthur Miller is a regional playwright from Brooklyn, if you like. If there's fundamental truth in Preston's plays about Bradleyville, Texas, then that truth will be perceptible everywhere." ■

"Little attention has been paid to the transformation of the country's most vital performing arts center into a holder of real estate leases on two theaters." (Anna Kisselgoff)

DANCE VIEW

ANNA KISSELGOFF

The Demise Of a 'Theater For the People'

The City Center of Music and Drama, as we have known it, has passed away and no one seems to care.

It is a sign of our times—of the change in attitude toward the arts as public service—that so little attention has been paid to the transformation of the country's most vital performing arts center into a holder of real estate leases on two theaters.

As a legal entity, the City Center of Music and Drama, Inc., still exists. It is a private nonprofit corporation that has a lease from the city on the City Center 55th Street Theater. It also operates the New York State Theater, which it leases from the city through Lincoln Center. The New York City Ballet and the New York City Opera are still called constituents of the City Center.

Yet, anyone who has observed both what has happened and what has not happened at the City Center since the summer of 1975 can only conclude that it is not the old populist arts sponsor it used to be. It has dropped its functions of producer and impresario. It no longer spreads an umbrella, with subsidy, over a variety of drama, music and theater groups. Its populism appears limited to a relatively low-priced ticket policy but even the once-sacred tenet of a single top price is no longer firm.

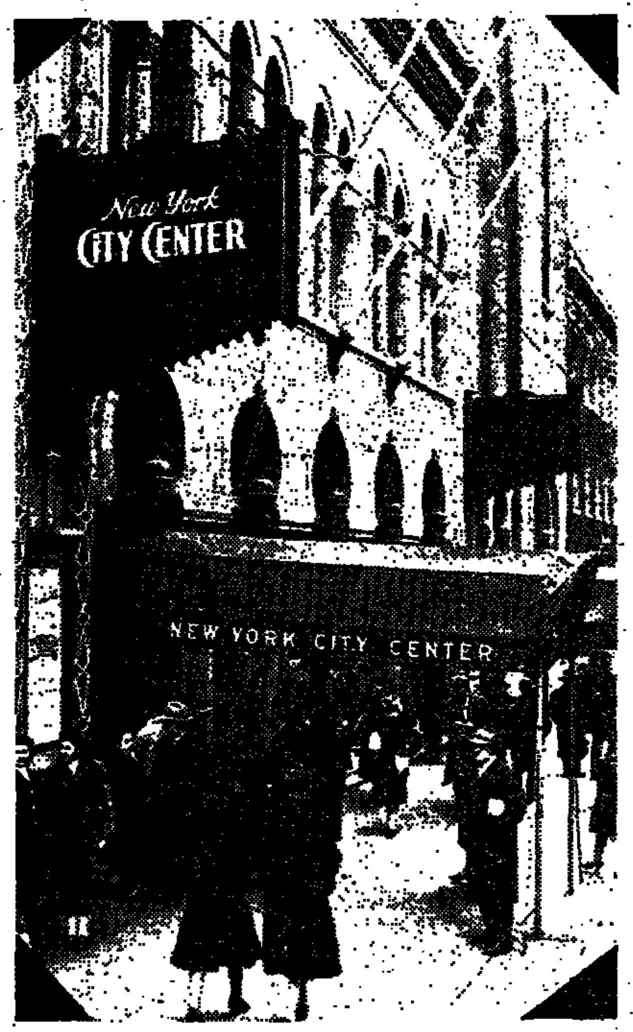
In response to this curtailing of activity and the virtual abolition of their own subsidies from the City Center, the Joffrey Ballet and the Alvin Ailey Dance Theater (the 55th Street Theater's resident dance companies) moved this spring to assume control of the 55th Street house. This month, the theater comes under the management of a new nonprofit corporation, the 55th Street Dance Foundation, which, in effect, hands over the booking, operating and financial responsibility of the theater to four dance companies for one year. In addition to Joffrey and Ailey the sponsoring companies are American Ballet Theater and the Eliot Feld Ballet.

It is too early to speculate on the prospects for success of this unique venture. But it is not too soon to suggest that this same venture is a pragmatic bid for survival by the dance companies at a time when the City Center has ceased to play its traditional role.



"In brighter days, a cultural beehive"

This change in direction has gone unannounced, but it has taken place. Until 1974, the governing image of the City Center was that of "a theater for the people." The idea of a popular-priced performing arts center came from Mayor Fiorello La Guardia in 1943. But it was Newbold Morris, then the City Council president, who suggested that this center's site be the former 55th Street Shriners auditorium that the city had already acquired for nonpayment of taxes.

In the decades that followed, Newbold Morris and Morton Baum, long the center's chief executive, were the practical visionaries who never lost sight of the democratic ideal proclaimed for the City Center at its inception.

It is not irrelevant to point out that the first-organiza-

Reels of Rarities On Film At Lincoln Center

By ROGER COPELAND

Even in New York, the uncontested dance capital of the world, September can be a pretty dull month for dancegoers. The sort of gourmet smorgasbord which New York dance enthusiasts usually take for granted shrinks to something more like a midnight snack. So for those whose insatiable appetite for dance remains unsatisfied, here is a suggestion: visit the wonderful archive of films at the Dance Collection at Lincoln Center's Library and Museum of the Performing Arts (a branch of the New York City Public Library). Here, even during the end-of-summer doldrums, one can see Natalia Makarova, Erik Bruhn, Suzanne Farrell and Rudolf Nuruyev—on film, and free of charge.

The collection's real value, of course, is not as a substitute for live performance, but rather as a means of preserving on film that which can no longer be seen live — those performances which would simply vanish (or at least recede into the dim and unreliable recesses of memory) were it not for the technology of film. Known officially as The Jerome Robbins Film Archive (because Robbins donated a fixed percentage of his yearly earnings from "Fiddler on the Roof" for the maintenance of the collection), this cinematic treasure chest contains—at last count—1,433 films (well over one million feet of footage) and 287 videotapes.

For the price of a phone call, one can arrange a private screening on one of the library's two Steenbeck viewing machines (a combination projector and screen approximately the size of a large portable television). A number of films can only be seen with the permission of the choreographer or donor (since copyright laws do not as yet apply to dance, many choreographers are justifiably fearful of plagiarism). And a small number of films and tapes—fewer than 7 percent—are closed to the public because of union restrictions. But the great bulk of the collection is available to anyone wishing to use it.

One of the nicest things about the collection—at least from the dance historian's point of view—is that most of its films do not attempt to "enhance" stagebound choreography with a dazzling display of cinematic technique. Cross-fades, super-impositions and slow-motion sequences appear sparingly, if at all. The camera is content to passively record, as best it can, a pre-existing work. In fact, many of the most valuable and unusual films in the collection are technically rather crude—footage shot by amateurs under adverse conditions on a shoestring budget.

The real gems in the collection are those films which cannot be rented commercially or seen elsewhere. Where else, for example, could one hope to see footage of Leonide Massine's work for the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo? Among the collection's Ballet Russe films are excerpts of Massine, Alexandra Danilova and Frederic Franklin in "Petrouchka," as well as snatches of Massine and Tamara Toumanova in "The Three-Cornered Hat."

Some of the most charming films in the collection acquired their significance retroactively—that is, they routinely recorded the dancing of some talented, unknown youngster who subsequently went on to achieve international prominence. For example, the archive owns a Leningrad Kirov Ballet School film of Nureyev's graduation exercises completed just before he went on to become a featured soloist with the Kirov. Similarly, the Joffrey's Gary Chryst and Christian Holder can be glimpsed in their pre-professional days as fellow students at the High School of the Performing Arts.

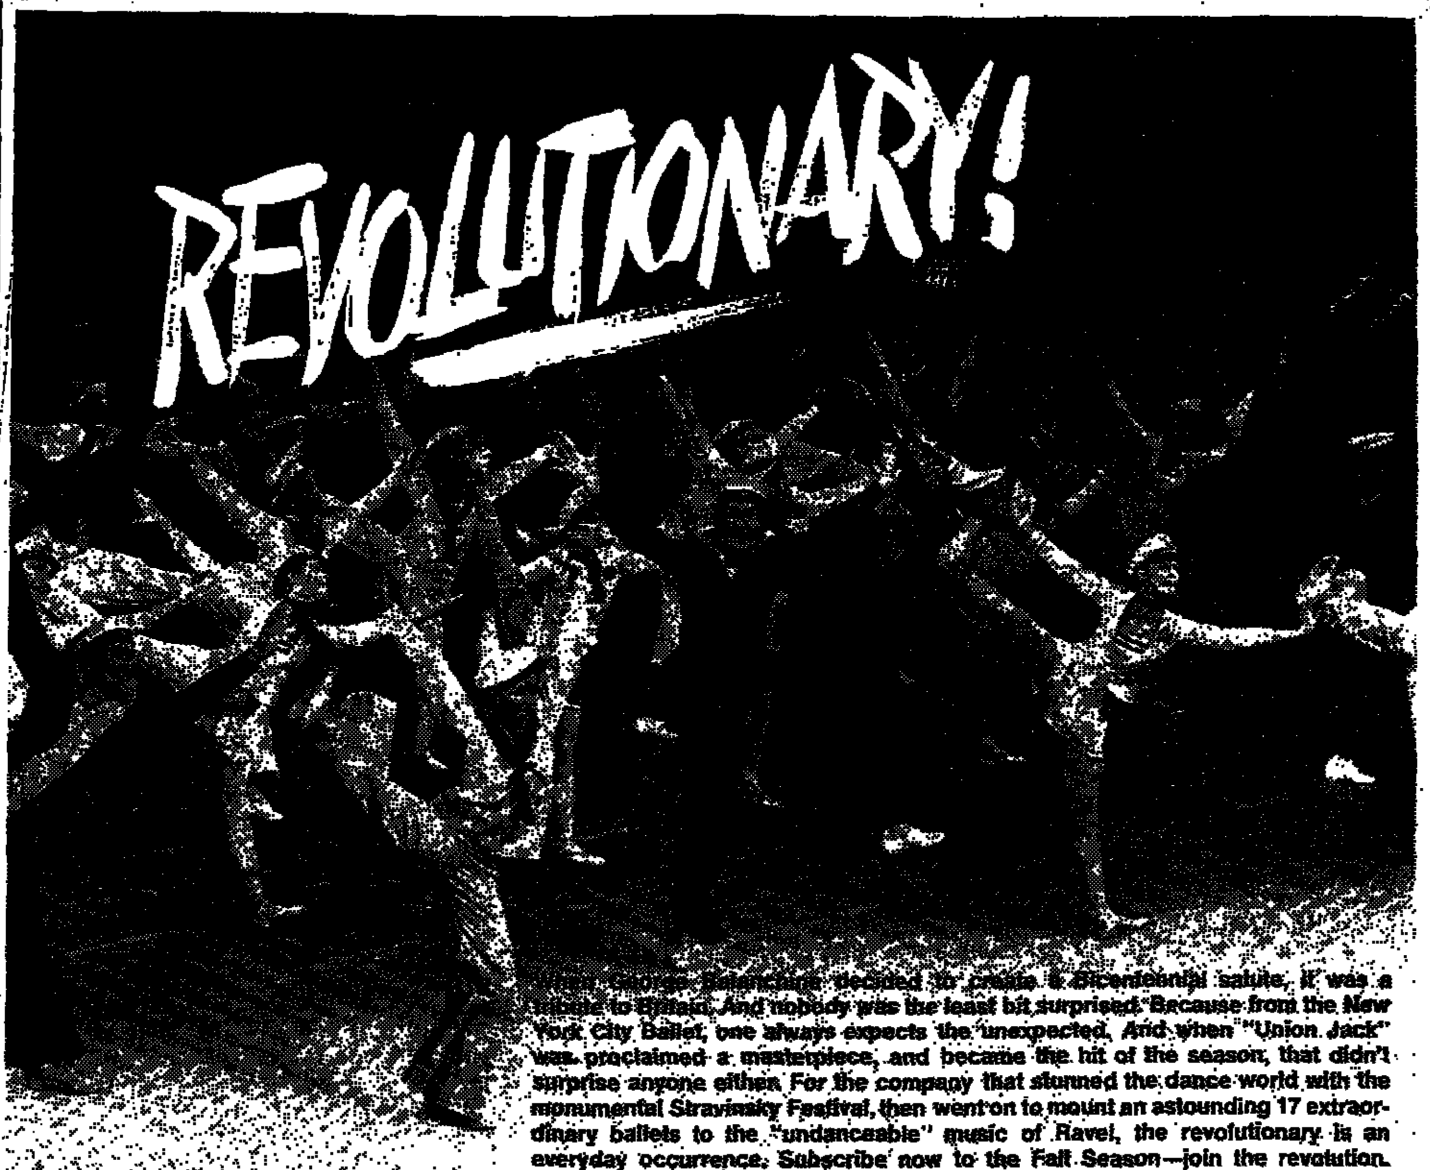
NEW YORK STATE THEATER, LINCOLN CENTER / TR 7-4727



When George Balanchine decided to create a Bicentennial salute, it was a tribute to Britain. And nobody was the least bit surprised. Because from the New York City Ballet, one always expects the unexpected. And when "Union Jack" was proclaimed a masterpiece, and became the hit of the season, that didn't surprise anyone either. For the company that stunned the dance world with the monumental Stravinsky Festival, then went on to mount an astounding 17 extraordinary ballets to the "undanceable" music of Ravel, the revolutionary is an everyday occurrence. A REPORT FROM LONDON

'Watercolorgate' —Whimsy, Fakery And Esthetic Truth

By BERNARD WEINRAUB

LONDON

It's been a melancholy summer and early autumn in London. The drought has withered the grass on Hampstead Heath, emptied the sprays on Trafalgar Square and sparked pleas for restrictions on washing dishes and taking baths. There was the worst racial violence in years near Portobello Road, the pound has begun to drop again, the chimes of Big Ben collapsed at 3:45 one afternoon—a case of metal fatigue—and the British Government was asked by Pakistan to return one of the most valuable gems in the world, the 109-carat Koh-i-noor diamond, which was set in Queen Victoria's crown, and served, in its own dazzling way, to symbolize British imperialism. ("Greece will be on about the Elgin Marbles again any time," muttered The Financial Times).

"Watch It All Come Down" — the title of John Osborne's newest and dreariest drama—seemed the bywords. An American woman saw a mouse scamper across the bar of the Ritz Hotel. The man who was proclaimed the Brain of Britain—after responding, with ease, to an alarming [...] BBC—found himself wit[...] "The fact that I'm unemp[...] symbolizes the national [...]" Thomas Dyer, a teacher [...] "We don't really know wh[...] our brains."

In the midst of this sul[...]pered mood, a lone figure emerged to delight and fa[...] paper readers, stun the a[...] raise intriguing questions [...] wheeling and dealing in [...] blurred line that may, p[...] rate art from artifact.

The figure is 59-year-o[...]ing, an ebullient, white-be[...] restorer and painter, who [...] that he flooded the Britis[...] with 2,000 fake paintin[...] which fetched tens of thou[...]lars from reputable gallerie[...]

With disarming frank[...] has said that he duped t[...] with 13—and possibly far [...]tions of Samuel Palme[...] whose landscapes are am[...] sought-after of the Engl[...] painters. He also imitate[...] Goya, Gainsborough, Co[...] Degas and Turner.

Cousin Cousine left me feeling lightheaded and euphoric as if I had just spent a glorious afternoon in the country with dear friends. ★★★½."
—Kathleen Carroll, New York Daily News

"Cousin Cousine is quite possibly the most accurate representation of happy, healthy sensuality I have seen on film."
—John Simon, New York Magazine

"Delicious adult comedy. An instant classic on the level of 'It Happened One Night'."
—Bruce Williamson, Playboy Magazine

"The stars are sublime, the movie glows. You will be indecently delighted."
—Frank Rich, New York Post

"An exceptionally winning, wittily detailed comedy."
—Vincent Canby, New York Times

"Cousin Cousine is fetchingly loony and great fun."
—Janet Maslin, Newsweek

"One of those rare films you'll want to see again and again and again."

Watercolorgate

Painter Keating—He duped the art world.

What has not yet emerged—and what fascinates and frightens the British art world—is the potential scale of the art forgery racket, and the possibility that influential dealers and galleries were involved in it. One newspaper has called it the "Watercolorgate Affair." There are rumors of other painters selling forged works of art.

"The question is, 'Who were the people responsible for the forged pedigrees, the false inscription on these paintings'," said Hugh Leggatt, one of London's most respected dealers. "Who verified these paintings? We're only a quarter of a way through this story."

Although rumors have surfaced for years that Palmer fakes were being sold—one of Keating's reported forgeries sold at Sotheby's in 1973 for £15,000, a record for Palmer—that scandal erupted when Geraldine Norman, The Times of London's auction-room correspondent, found Keating in his cottage in Dedham over the summer and began unraveling the story.

Keating finally wrote a letter of confession to The Times: "I flooded the market with the 'work' of Palmer and many others, not for gain (I hope I am no materialist) but simply as a protest against merchants who make capital out of these I am proud to call my brother artists, both living and dead."

In seeking to expose the phoneyness of the art world, Keating said that on each canvas, under the painting, he wrote the word "fake," or his own name or a "rude remark." Nonetheless, the paintings were auctioned at high prices, and since Keating made little money from them, emerged who did pro Keating himself spok dlemen who turned to buy fakes for £20.

"Cousin, Cousine," Marthe (Marie-Chris- Ludovic (Victor Lanoux) are not separated rs. When they first meet at the wedding of Marthe's mother to Ludovic's uncle, Marthe and Ludovic are very much married to other spouses, though not happily. Marthe's husband is a compulsive philanderer and Ludovic's wife is a pretty, bird-brained neurotic who takes periodic sleep cures. Marthe and Ludovic are drawn together when Marthe's husband zeros in on Ludevic's wife simply because she's there, but with no more interest than he has in the bus driver, the sales clerk, the family councillor and all the other women with whom he's maintaining liaisons more dopey than dangerous. However, the only real barrier to Marthe and Ludovic is the determination that each must discover within in order to take decisive action.

As written by Tacchella, Marthe and Ludovic are immensely winning characters, rigorously honest, kind without being stupid, witty, each completely in charge of himself/herself and thus in no need to rush into affairs or into sleep cures to cope with or avoid the world outside. They are so practically perfect that they might be impossibly saintlike without the humor, intelligence and revivifying spite that Miss Barrault and Mr. Lanoux bring to their roles. She is a radiant blonde with a firm will and he gives every impression of being the sort of man who has seen most of life's idiocies, identified them and refused to despair if only because he wants to see what new idiocy will turn up next. Actors and characters are so beautifully matched that it's no-contest with anyone else in the film. There's no doubt about what will happen, only how.

Mr. Tacchella's method is steadfastly sunny. Most of "Cousin, Cousine" takes place in spring and summer in the verdant banlieue of Paris. The autumn days we see are brisk and clean, and when the season turns wintry, it's not just any winter day but Christmas Eve. The affair of Marthe and Ludovic is not isolated but contained within a large, loving, tightly knit family group that is prepared to forgive all trespasses. These are the details by which such romantic comedies are created, but if the film were not so essentially comic, the details would be merely decorative.

When it opened in July, "Cousin, Cousine" received favorable notices, but so have a number of other imported films —equally unknown to the general public—which have gone on to die fast deaths at the box offices. It's apparent that audiences are keeping this one alive, a factor that's almost as refreshing as the film itself. It should give backbone to movie distributors and theater owners who, like producers, are inclined to read their balance sheets and think that the only way to stay in business is to show machine-made schlock. Not so.

Not all the films coming in from abroad these days are great, but people who have given up on the domestic stuff should give consideration not only to "Cousin, Cousine," but to another French import, Bertrand Tavernier's "The Clockmaker" featuring Phillipe Noiret's extraordinary performance, Peter Watkins's "Edvard Munch," a fine, very socially conscious biography of an artistic temperament, that of the great Norwegian Expressionist painter, and, from Japan, Masaki Kobayashi's "Kaseki," a dour but monumental film about a man, and a nation, to whom fate hands a queen of spades.

'I Am Not Movie Star! I Am Only Man From Street!'

By ROWLAND BARBER

LOS ANGELES

Today is the 21st day of shooting of "The Turning Point." The company, having completed its location work in New York, has moved west to take over Stage 15 at the Twentieth Century-Fox studios. The milieu of "The Turning Point" is the ballet, and the screenplay by Arthur Laurents is concerned with the continuity of the art, and the steep, emotional price that dedication to it exacts from its artists. A woman can't be a ballerina and raise a family, too; it's either/or. In the film, Anne Bancroft is the either—the star ballerina; Shirley Maclaine's the or—the Texas housewife. Miss MacLaine's daughter, played by newcomer Leslie Browne, has reached the moment of that decision—the turning point—that her mother faced 20 years before.

Although Herbert Ross, the film's director, is known for his low-key approach, there is a decided air of tension on the set today. For this is the day that Mikhail Baryshnikov will go before the camera to play his first dramatic scene as a screen actor. And to a lot of people, the charismatic Russian dancer is what this movie is truly all about.

The great media leap—from another arena into the movies—has always been a risky box-office move. Jack Dempsey didn't make it. Neither did Amos and Andy, nor Joe Namath. Geraldine Farrar and Oscar Levant had slightly happier landings. But Moira Shearer was stopped dead in her tracks after making the grand jeté from ballet to silver screen. What, then, is the prognosis for Mikhail Baryshnikov, or Misha, as he is called by his friends and co-workers.

"I think Misha has already made the transition from dancer to actor," said Ross. "He was very nervous during the first read-through of the script. But he has the intelligence and instincts of a superior artist, and he sensed at once the difference between projecting a role on stage and behaving naturalistically in front of a camera. He did improvisations during rehearsals, and amazed me; his ad libs were right on the point. Misha has something that very few dancers have—wit. And charm, in the movie-star sense."

We were chatting in Ross's little trailer office inside the sound stage, waiting for the crew to set up the lights for Baryshnikov's scene. Former ballerina Nora Kaye, who is Mrs. Ross in private life, remarked that Baryshnikov might be approaching a turning point of his own. "When this picture is out," she said, "he's going to get offers to act. I wonder if he will take them."

Suddenly Baryshnikov was with us, wearing flared jeans, a black tee shirt and western boots that brought him up to a full five feet, five inches. Offstage, without make-up, he looks much younger than his 28 years—until seen close-up, full face. There is an over-ripe look around his blue-gray eyes that hints at unreported night-time pleasures. Waiting to be summoned to the set, Baryshnikov sat with me outside the trailer and talked about film making: "It is still strange, very strange to me," he said. "So much waiting, not moving. Difficult for dancer. I want to be good whatever I do, but I cannot understand specifics of this work, so I cannot tell what is good, what not good. In ballet I can control my art, is different law than be actor in movie. For me especially is language problem also. I have like computer working in my head, to translate English to Russian to English. I must learn what is point of every phrase I speak, not just phonetics."

One wonders if Baryshnikov ever had fantasies about being a movie star. "I saw many movies when I was a boy," he said. "Russian, American, and my favorite was Chaplin, but I never have such a fantasy. My only dream is to dance."

But now he is a movie star, and it is time to face the camera. The scene being shot is an encounter in a rehearsal hall between Baryshnikov (as Yuri, a dancer who is something of a tutu-chaser) and Miss Browne (as Emilia, Shirley Maclaine's 17-year-old daughter, a ballerina just rising from the ranks of the corps de ballet). Although it will not last more than a minute-and-a-half on the screen, it embodies the resolution of this story, of backstage conflict. As they rehearse a pas de deux, Yuri urges Emilia to resume their affair, broken off after she had discovered him with another ballerina. Emilia had mistaken his ardor for true love, and now she is unforgiving. After a bittersweet final kiss, she obliterates everything from her mind except dancing. It is her point of no return.

In his debut as a dramatic actor, Mikhail Baryshnikov even has a big bedroom scene

Baryshnikov's second line, in the scene, spoken when he comes upon Miss Browne as she dances alone, is: "How is it possible to work without a partner?" On the seventh take it came out, "Har is parsible work wissout passner?" After Ross yelled "Cut!" the embarrassed dancer ran to Nora Kaye and said, "I am sorry! My mouse is full of garbage!" Ross however, told him not to worry, adding warmly: "Misha, this scene is beginning to work. You are becoming absolutely passionate."

Baryshnikov was puzzled. "Passionate?"

"You know," said Ross, "emotional."

Baryshnikov stood there, eyes wide, mouth agape, furiously brushing the sides of his hair with his palms —a tic that seems to be triggered whenever his language computer is jammed. Then, silently, he walked away.

I caught up with him and told him what a remarkable job I thought he was doing, how he was underplaying perfectly for the camera and seemed to be a completely natural movie actor. He stared at me for a moment, apparently wondering if I was putting him on. Then, giggling and almost choking on his words, he said, "No! I am not movie star! I am not actor! I am only man from street."

Ross called for still more takes of the rehearsal-hall scene, shooting it from every conceivable point of view. "Just an inch more to your right, Misha," he would say. "Hold it . . . now walk a little toward Leslie. Put more of your weight on the left foot this time when you kiss. And pause just a bit longer before Leslie's line. Remember, Misha, try to make her smile after you kiss her —and don't forget to watch that shadow on Leslie's cheek. Too far, Misha, go back to your left a tiny, tiny bit. There! Hold it! Hold it!"

Leslie Browne, a lovely, fawn-eyed girl, is nine years younger than Baryshnikov and has had to struggle to overcome her awe of him. And, like Baryshnikov, she was nervous about the scene to be shot the next day, an explicit bedroom scene which will be closed to everybody except Ross and the key technicians.

On Thursday, the day after the bedroom scene, Miss Browne arrived on the set looking bright-eyed and bouncy, with new color in her cheeks. When she was asked how the scene had gone, she replied, "No problem. It went very well for me. But Misha —Misha was trembling all through it."

When Baryshnikov appeared, one of the Ballet Theater dancers asked, "Well, Misha, were you magnificent? How was the great love scene?"

"Such a question," answered Baryshnikov coolly, letting the subject drop.

Just then a publicity man brought in the new issue of a weekly magazine. In its gossip column there was an item on Baryshnikov, reporting that he would be appearing in the movie version of "Hair."

"Why they print such fantastical lie?" he said when he had read the item. "Why?"

Then he shrugged and grinned a boyish grin. "Ah, well," he said, handing the magazine back to the publicist, "there is old saying in Russian, 'Dog bark, but wind blow it away.'"

Half an hour later, on the set, he was still laughing about the magazine item and as he laughed, he spoke into an imaginary hand-mike and danced about, tripping over the mike's invisible cord. "Look-it! 'Hair'! I pop star! I rock star!" Even dancing in jest, his control was breath-taking. Undoubtedly, there will be many movie offers —from "Hair" to there. But the odds are that they will be blown away with the barking, and Baryshnikov will keep on doing what he does best, perhaps better than anybody else in the world. ■ won instant stardom brother on television's Man," is making his The Deep," based on best-selling follow-up film, which co-stars d Jacqueline Bisset, honeymooning couple Bermuda and discover a cache of Spanish treasure and a cargo of morphine that is worth millions.

Since approximately 40 percent of "The Deep's" action literally takes place in the deep, all of the film's actors and technicians have had to learn to ply their crafts at depths that have ranged to 80 feet. The entire unit, consisting of 100 men and 4 women, spent a month off the coast of the British Virgin Islands, where they accomplished a total of 1,465 dives, gathering almost 1,000 bits of usable film in the process.

Now the company is spending a second month under the hot Bermuda sun performing in a man-made million-dollar "pool" that Columbia Pictures describes as "the largest underwater set ever constructed." This concrete excavation is 120 feet long and 30 feet deep, contains a million gallons of salt water and has been stocked with a thousand salt-water fish. The interior of a sunken Spanish galleon as well as "the cave of the giant Moray eel" are two of the five underwater "interiors."

Nolte and Bisset finding treasure in "The Deep"

Waterlogged or not, "The Deep's" actors and crew have become remarkably adept at roaming through this underwater maze, achieving the most spectacular effects with total ease. Perhaps that's why an air of placidity has settled over the entire set. That placidity, however, has not dampened the ebullience of producer Peter Guber, a sun-tanned man in his mid-thirties who immediately launches into a description of the technique he used in getting his three stars into the water.

"I knew that I had to get one star under the water," he says. "The ego and pride of the other two would not allow them to think that they couldn't do it. It's been awesome to see these actors who have never dived before slip into their wet suits, air tanks, snorkels and flippers and go down — and stay down — there. Of course, there have been mishaps. The first week Nick Nolte was learning to dive, he ran out of air and had to make a rapid 80-foot ascent to the surface, and that's not easy. If you become frightened and do the wrong thing, you can easily suffer an embolism—an air bubble in your heart or brain—and die."

Embolism seems to be the furthest thing from Jacqueline Bisset's mind as she attends a briefing session on the deck over the set. The session is being conducted by director Peter Yates, a jolly, balding man best known for his direction of "Bullitt." Yates addresses himself not only to his beautiful star, but also to the crew that surrounds her—three cameramen a director of photography, a lighting designer, an assistant director, a props man, and a dive master and his four-man dive support team whose function is to supervise the diving and breathing equipment.

In the scene to be shot this afternoon, Miss Bisset must react emotionally to an underwater explosion which has already been shot. "Look surprised!" Yates urges, pantomiming a furious Australian crawl climaxed by a broad gesture of astonishment that would be perfectly at home in "Orphans of the Storm."

"Look for Nick," continues Yates, making more frantic swimming motions. "It's so dark! So dirty! You can't see Nick! Look for him! Look! Look!"

As soon as Miss Bisset understands what is expected of her, she and the other actors don their gear and descend into the water. Chubby cameramen dart about below the surface, gracefully executing frog kicks as they push lightweight cameras before them. Suddenly, the "script woman" rises to the surface and points to a waterproof slate on which she has written a message with a waterproof grease pencil: "Jackie's weight belt is showing."

The assistant director leans over the

Dear George, John, Paul and Ringo,

You have made the world a happier place to live in. Your music has found its way into the hearts of millions of people in every corner of the world. For almost ten years now, your dedicated old friends, and countless new friends—have hoped, have waited, and patiently watched for a signal from you—that you might play from one stage, just one more time, individually, or together.

In a world that seems so hopelessly divided, engaged in civil war, scarred by earthquakes, and too often living in fear of tomorrow's encore of tragic headlines—more than ever, we need a symbol of hope for the future. Simply by showing the world that people can get it together.

Let the world smile for one day. Let us change the headlines from gloom and hopelessness to music and life and a worldwide message of peace. You four are among the very few who are in a position to make the dream of a better world come together in the hearts of millions in just one day.

The burden of the world is not on your shoulders—we all share that responsibility. This proposal is made for your consideration—only if you can find the time—and the strength to put it together.

We out there would welcome your return.

THE PLAN: Your appearance on one stage; whether you play individually or collectively, or both, would be seen by an audience of millions Moderately priced tickets would be sold in advance, at every theatre, auditorium, concert hall, and arena—where closed circuit television cables could be placed.

On the day of the event, ticket holders would be required to bring, in addition to their ticket of admission—a can of food, or an article of new or useful clothing, to be deposited in boxes at each facility. These gifts could feed and clothe an impoverished nation for years.

A 'volunteer' foundation or worldwide organization such as CARE or UNICEF could lend their resources to pick up these life-giving gifts, the day after your concert, and distribute them five days later to an area, changed over-night into a nation of hope and life.

*THE POSSIBLE REVENUES: $100 million from the sale of an album recorded 'live' of this event...$40 million from the sale of seats at a moderate ticket price to every closed-circuit venue around the world...$15 million for TV rights around the world; to be shown the next day, or the next week, free, to all who couldn't buy tickets, the night of the concert...$60 million from a movie of the event itself, and an equal amount of footage devoted to each of you—to talk, play, or share in your own way, your lives as individuals—with your friends who want to see you...$15 million from the sale of program books and souvenirs.

THE TIME: New Year's Day or Easter 1977.

THE PLACE: Bethlehem! Liverpool! Or wherever it is right.

Respectfully,

released the first three-disk installment of Michael Ponti's survey. Volume Three of Ruth Laredo's single-disk series appeared recently, containing her most effective performances to date. This set does not appear destined to become a classic survey on the order of Gieseking's complete Debussy or Landowska's Bach, but Miss Laredo has an intuitive understanding of Rachmaninoff's style and her competent technique enables her to give many individually persuasive readings and, in Volume Three, several memorable ones.

Three years ago, Vladimir Ashkenazy recorded the Etudes-tableaux, Op. 39, the first recording to combine perceptive readings of the individual etudes and a performance of the whole set as a dramatic unity. This sort of unity is missing in the new recordings of the preludes by Miss Laredo and Agustin Anievas (whose set also includes the first recording of three juvenile nocturnes). Both artists play well and make many telling musical points, but they fail to emphasize the cyclic qualities of the sets, particularly in the 13 Preludes, Op. 32.

This set is in many ways like a song cycle without words, built on a mere handful of thematic and rhythmic elements, which only emerge when the entire set is persuasively performed. Problems of unresolved, shifting tonality posed by one prelude (No. 6 in F minor, for instance) are solved in the next (in F major). A monumental labyrinth (E minor) is "set up" by its predecessor, a beguilingly simple statement (E major). And if there was any doubt that the preludes form an entity, Rachmaninoff dispels it in the last (D flat major), which contains thematic arrows pointing backward to elements of earlier preludes before revealing itself to be the climax of the entire set.

Vladimir Ashkenazy, in a new recording of both sets of preludes, reminds us that these pieces comprise Rachmaninoff's most searching and complex music. Ashkenazy's performance of the D flat major alone is like the convening of a master-class, and he gives the earlier set (Op. 23) its most effective recording to date.

The young French pianist Jean-Philippe Collard seems to be aiming at a complete Rachmaninoff cycle for Connoisseur Society. His first two releases contain the etudes-tableaux, the "Corelli" Variations and what is said to be the first recording of the "original 1913 version" of the Second Piano Sonata. In terms of size and technical demands, this Sonata is the solo counterpart of the Third Concerto. No one has ever recorded the original version before (Rachmaninoff extensively revised it in 1931, and Horowitz made a further composer-authorized abridgement). Nor, in fact, has Collard, who departs from both the original and revision, apparently inventing some passagework of his own.

Until his New York debut last season, the Soviet pianist Lazar Berman was known principally by reputation, a reputation established at least in part by a remarkable recording of Rachmaninoff's Six Moments Musicaux, Op. 16. He has now re-recorded the set for Deutsche Grammophon, in a performance that is technically even superior to the earlier set, but which conveys far less of the music's direct, fragile beauty.

A couple of seasons ago, it was rumored that Horowitz was preparing Rachmaninoff's rarely heard "Chopin" Variations, Op. 22, but until that recording materializes Paulina Drake's performance of the work on Orion is at least honest and persuasive.

RACHMANINOFF: Third Piano Concerto; Vladimir Ashkenazy, Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy; RCA ARL 1-1324. Third Piano Concerto; Alicia de Larrocha, London Symphony, André Previn; London CS6977. Suites for Two Pianos; Vladimir Ashkenazy, André Previn; London CS 6893. Piano Concerto No. 2; Three Preludes; Gina Bachauer, Orchestre Philharmonique de Strasbourg, Alain Lombard; Erato STU 70768. Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini (with Dohnanyi's "Nursery" Variations); Cristina Ortiz, New Philharmonia, Kazuhiro Koizumi; Angel S 37178. Works for Solo Piano, Vols. 1, 2 & 3; Ruth Laredo; Columbia M 32938, M 33430, M 33998. Complete Preludes and Nocturnes; Agustin Anievas; Angel SB 3805. Complete Preludes; Vladimir Ashkenazy; London CS 2241. Etudes-tableaux, Opp. 33 & 39; Piano Sonata No. 2; "Corelli" Variations; Jean-Philippe Collard; Connoisseur Society CS 2075 and CSQ 2082. Six Moments Musicaux (with Prokofiev's Sonata No. 8) Lazar Berman; Deutsche Grammophon 2530 678. "Chopin" Variations (with works by Prokofiev, Mnczynski and Kabalevsky); Paulina Drake; Orion ORS 75168.

ALIX WILLIAMSON presents,

The World Premiere Performances Of

The Waverly Consort's

fully staged production, with colorful costumes, scenic effects and narration.

Le Roman de Fauvel

a unique blend of poetry, music and visual art based on the vast 14th Century "Fauvel" collection in the Bibliotheque Nationale de Paris.

3 New York Performances Only

Wednesday, October 20th and Saturday, October 23rd at 8:00 P.M.
Sunday, October 24th at 3:00 P.M.

Narrator, 6 singers, 5 instrumentalists, unusual Medieval instruments, including: Medieval fiddles, vielles, lutes, recorders, shawms, rebecs, saz, minstrel's harp, psaltery, hurdy-gurdy, portative organ, kemence, and tabor

The Fauvel manuscript, on which The Waverly Consort's Director, Michael Jaffee, has based this exciting new stage production, is an unparalleled treasury comprising more than 150 pieces of music by various composers—including lais, conducti, Gregorian chants and motets—which marvelously sum up the monophonic and polyphonic styles of the 13th and 14th Centuries; along with an epic story, contained in some 6000 verses, recounting the adventures of Fauvel, an ass whose name is an acronym derived from 6 French words for different vices and evils and who is used as an allegorical figure representing greed and villainy rampant in the church and monarchy of the times.

...er of "Belle Helene." ...e City Opera production ...ight, Henry Price, ...strong and James Billings.

It was wrong in his eyes for a lady to be exposed to the jokes about the sexual drives of men and the weaknesses of women. It may have been even wronger for a woman to be exposed to the thinly veiled attacks on church and royalty.

On the surface, "La Belle Hélène" is a merry romp through classical antiquity. Ludovic Halévy (the nephew of the famous composer of "La Juive") and Henri Meilhac wrote the libretto. It was their first collaboration (to be followed by "Bluebeard," "La Vie Parisienne," "La Grande-Duchesse de Gérolstein" and "La Périchole," among others). Their libretto is built around the seduction and abduction of Helen by Paris. This Helen is a vain, bored woman with a stupid husband. But, at that, Menelaus is no stupider than the four kings of Greece who figure in the libretto. The brightest person is Calchas, the high priest. He is an operator, a cynical ecclesiast, a thriving gambler, who knows how to Get Things Done.

Before Paris finally goes off with Helen, getting her by a ruse that satirizes the oracle business, there are all kinds of nonsensical goings-on. The various gods are presented in anything but a flattering light. And, as Offenbach's audiences recognized, the action was applicable to the Third Empire. Hélène is a giddy, pleasure-seeking woman, no better than she should be. Orestes, the son of Agamemnon, is a symbol of the nepotism and venality that plagued France. He spends a great deal of money for girls and a good time. He knows that Papa is going to have a fit about this. But Papa isn't going to pay, after all. "C'est la Grèce qui payera."

In the four pompous kings, one can see the rulers of France. There are even digs at French culture. The four kings are being entertained. "Nice music," says Agamemnon. "From Sparta?" "No, no," says Menelaus. "German. I got it for this ceremony." People chase after silly pleasures. There is that unforgettable "game of goose." The morality of the characters is reflected in Hélène's comment after Calchas gets caught cheating at dice: "He's a clumsy fool. What makes a scandal is not cheating but getting caught at it."

One should not even get caught at things where he is in the right. Menelaus surprises Paris in his wife's bedroom. For this he is roundly berated by the four kings. You had no right coming home without warning, they tell Menelaus. A husband has to warn his wife about such matters. He should give her the exact hour and minute of his return. Then all will be connubially sweet and pleasant.

The music to all this is gay and heady. Offenbach was, after all, a genius. He was not only a great melodist; his rhythm also was ingenious; his orchestrations were perfect for what he did, and he had an unparalleled ability for parody. The opening tongue-in-cheek chorus of "Hélène" sets the mood. It is a mock-heroic chorus of mourners, really terribly funny. The music throughout the operetta is in turn rakish, sentimental, elegant, always pointed. The first Paris solo, "Au mont Ida" (to use the French titles; the English libretto is not at hand), is irresistible. On the other side of the coin is the Paris-Helen duet in Act II, "Oui, c'est un rêve." This is one of those long, enchanting Offenbach melodies in the best tradition of French opera. It was not for nothing that Rossini called Offenbach the Mozart of the Champs-Elysées.

Audiences will discover that they know a good deal of the score. For Manuel Rosenthal used quite a bit of music from "La Belle Hélène" for his "Gaîté Parisienne," and everybody knows "Gaîté." Thus there will be a ripple of recognition when Hélène's "Le roi plantif" comes at the end of Act I; or when Hélène's Act II "Un mari sage" and "Va-t'en, mon amour te suivra" hit the ear; or at the final chorus, "Pars pour Cythère."

When Offenbach died in 1881 there was almost a sigh of relief in some quarters. There were those serious-minded moralists who had thought Offenbach had been a blight on the art of music. To them, light music was necessarily frivolous music, unimportant music, sinful music. Dwight's "Journal of Music" in Boston approvingly reprinted the obituary notice of The Chicago Tribune, in which the writer said that, yes, Offenbach had been popular all over the world, but that opéra-bouffe had had its day. "It was the fashion of a period—a fashion which for a time did great harm to legitimate music, corrupted the popular taste, and at least did not benefit public morals . . . Much as we may admire Offenbach's humor, his industry, and his thorough and keen appreciation of burlesque, he has written nothing that will live, nothing that has made the world better, nothing that has refined or elevated music. His name as well as his music will soon be forgotten."

But one thing about Dwight and his "Journal of Music." Dwight was always big enough to present several sides of a question, and he followed The Tribune obituary notice a few weeks later with a long appreciation by the dean of European music critics, Eduard Hanslick. Wagner's opinion to the contrary notwithstanding, Hanslick was one of the greatest of all critics: a well trained musician, an urbane man, a polished and even brilliant writer.

Hanslick pointed out, in a survey of Offenbach's career that even today impresses with its accuracy and understanding, that Offenbach "had created a new style in which he reigned absolutely alone, and though that style certainly held a subordinate rank in the hierarchy of the drama, it afforded millions of human beings for a quarter of a century the almost lost pleasure derivable from a copious stream of fresh, easy-flowing, joyous music. To musical tragedy and the higher musical comedy, Offenbach added a third and well-justified category: the musical farce."

There is more, much more, but Hanslick put his finger on the essential quality of the Offenbach phenomenon. It was joyous music, and it has remained so through the years. Hanslick knew, as so many do not, that it is harder to write great light music than great serious music. There are moments in "La Belle Hélène" that make the listener wiggle with pleasure. It's light music. Of course, but it's anything but inconsequential.

Music Notes: Asked for One, Cage Writes Two

By SHIRLEY FLEMING

John Cage's newly commissioned work for the Boston Symphony (which will be given its first performance in Boston under Ozawa on Sept. 29 and presented here by the New York Philharmonic under Boulez on Nov. 5, is in a sense a double premiere. Cage has, so to speak, delivered two scores for the price of one: "Renga" and "Apartment House 1776" can be played separately, but they are designed also to be heard simultaneously, with the conductor making the decision as to which piece is to begin first, and which to end first.

As is customary with Cage, there is considerable freedom for the performers. "Renga" (which is the name of an elaborate Japanese poetic structure) is notated graphically, using 361 drawings by Thoreau to indicate choices of pitch and timing, and Cage remarks that "the sound of the piece cannot be imagined until it is actually performed." He has used the drawings, he says, "in order to free sounds from the tastes and memories of the performers and the composer."

"Apartment House 1776"—so named because many things are happening in it concurrently — is conventionally notated, but the four vocal soloists, who represent the diverse inhabitants of America 200 years ago (the Protestant, the Sephardic Jew, the American Indian, the Negro Slave), each sings an authentic song of his own heritage, not written by Cage. The composer hopes that if in the future his chosen vocalists—Helen Schneyer, Nico Castel, Swift Eagle, and Jeanne Lee—are not available for live performances they can be represented by their own tapes. Recorded sound is, after all, highly typical of an apartment house ambience, as the composer points out.

The Cage commission is the result of a National Endowment grant shared by the "Big Six" orchestras, each of which is entitled to the local premiere of the score.

Shirley Fleming is the editor of Musical America.

Cage: Thoreau supplied the notes.

Women Composers

Chances are that many people have forgotten by now that 1975-76 was Women's Year. There are two women composers in town, however, who have not forgotten and have not been satisfied. "I've been bothered by the token quality of what went on in music last season," says Doris Hays, who composes works for children as well as multimedia events and who, as a pianist, won first prize in the International Competition for Interpreters of New Music in Rotterdam several years ago. Miss Hays and Beth Anderson, who has received a National Endowment grant in composition, are counteracting their suspicion of tokenism with an 11-concert series which they have organized at the New School starting Oct. 1 called "Meet the Woman Composer." There will be 17 women involved in performance and discussion of their works, and the accent is decidedly avant-garde.

"Many women are doing original things in the experimental field," Miss Hays contends, and a glance at the New School events bears her out. Leading off the series is a Hunter College faculty member who works with environmental sounds; one participant is president of the Electronic Center for New Music in New York, another is associate director of the Columbia-Princeton Electronic Music Center, another is exploring modern vocal techniques, another works primarily in quarter tones. All this does not exclude conventional instruments on the series, of course, and a substantial assortment will be included. Miss Hays is pleased to have what appears to be the only collaboration. Heyward and his wife Dorothy were already preparing a stage adaptation for the Theater Guild, but Gershwin didn't mind waiting. Although he was riding the crest of success, as a composer of hit songs, shows and serious concert pieces, Gershwin felt he didn't yet have the technique necessary to compose an opera.

In the fall of 1930, Gershwin signed a contract with the Metropolitan Opera Association for an opera to be delivered at an unspecified date. He wanted a libretto set in New York's melting pot, but finding nothing that suited him, he settled on Ansky's Yiddish play "The Dybbuk." He had developed a sizable number of themes—all of which have since disappeared—when he was informed that the operatic rights had already been given to Italian composer Lodovico Rocca. Once again, Gershwin's thoughts turned to "Porgy."

Heyward was delighted to hear in March 1932 of Gershwin's renewed interest in the project, and he set to work refashioning his play for the composer. In place of the traditional songs and spirituals which had been introduced into the original script, it was necessary to write new but "authentic"-sounding lyrics, while about 40 percent of the dialogue had to be cut and rearranged so it would flow effortlessly into the more formal set pieces. The result of these labors was one of the most theatrically effective, psychologically believable and consistent librettos that any composer had the luck to set.

"At the outset we were faced by a difficult problem," wrote Heyward before the show's premiere. "I was firm in my refusal to leave the South and live in New York. The matter of effecting a happy union between words and music across a thousand miles of Atlantic seaboard baffled us for a moment. The solution came quite naturally when we associated Ira Gershwin with us. Presently we evolved a system by which, between my visits North, or George's dash to Charleston, I could send scenes and lyrics. Then the brothers Gershwin, after their extraordinary fashion, would get at the piano, pound, wrangle, swear, burst into weird snatches of song, and eventually emerge with a polished lyric."

Gershwin spent the summer of 1934 in South Carolina, living in a shack on Folly Island, a small barrier island 10 miles from Charleston. That summer Gershwin heard "Gullah" songs that were virtually unchanged from their African origins. These were the inspiration for the opening of the Kittiwah Island scene. After hearing the simultaneous individual prayers sung at a Holy Roller's meeting, he found the key to creating a mood of primitive intensity for the opening of the hurricane scene. On one remote island Gershwin joined in with the "shouting"—the complicated pattern beaten out by hands and feet as accompaniment to a spiritual—and carried back ideas that he incorporated into the song for Bess and chorus, "Oh, The Train Is at the Station." Gershwin took 11 months for the actual composition and then devoted eight more months to orchestration.

When Gershwin died in 1937, he had not heard "Porgy" performed as he had written it.

Rejecting an offer by the Metropolitan Opera, Gershwin decided to let the Theatre Guild produce "Porgy," reasoning that it would then reach a larger audience and that the six-week rehearsal period would be more than any opera company would offer. And most importantly he wanted the piece cast with black performers, which would have been out of the question at the Met.

Rouben Mamoulian, director of the original play, was chosen to repeat his staging chores and Alexander Smallens was hired as conductor. Casting presented formidable problems, since few black singers at this time had been given the opportunity to gain the experience necessary to sustain such difficult roles. After extensive searching the casting was set: Todd Duncan, Porgy; Anne Brown, Bess; Georgette Harvey, Maria; Ruby Elzy, Serena; Abbie Mitchell, Clara; and tap dancer John Bubbles, Sportin' Life.

Even before rehearsals began, compromises had to be made, and by the time the production opened at the Alvin Theater on Oct. 10, 1935, huge chunks of the score had been cut—most of the cuts being made after the Boston opening to trim the running time and to lighten the singing load of Todd Duncan. Audiences responded to the score with enthusiasm and the Boston critics were unanimous in their acclaim, but the score confused the New York critics and professionals who didn't know which pigeonhole to tuck it into—opera or musical comedy.

The production ran for 124 performances, but with 80 singers on stage and 42 musicians in the pit, the run could not pay back the large investment. When Gershwin died, on July 11, 1937, at the age of 38, he still had not heard his score performed exactly as he had written it.

Cheryl Crawford revived the show in 1941, but at the suggestion of Jean Dalrymple, reduced the cast by half, reduced the orchestra to 27 pieces, and turned the sung dialogue to spoken dialogue (heavily cut and rewritten from the original). A run of 286 performances at the Majestic Theater and a national tour of a year and half—with three return visits to New York—so firmly rooted this bastardized version in the public's mind that when, in 1961, Jean Dalrymple tried to set matters straight by reviving an almost complete version at the City Center, she was roundly condemned by critic Judith Crist and many theatergoers who insisted that Gershwin had not intended the piece to be sung straight through.

The virtually uncut Houston production should reveal a richness of detail and a breadth that had only been suggested before and demonstrated how Gershwin created a unified mosaic of themes much as Puccini does in "Madama Butterfly."

Gershwin was not a revolutionary. It was not his intention to expand or alter the form of the Broadway musical with "Porgy and Bess." (Even such a brilliantly integrated musical as "Of Thee I Sing" is a throwback to the Gilbert and Sullivan model.) Gershwin's genius resided in taking an established form—whether it be a concerto, opera or 32-bar song—and bringing it alive by infusing it with a voice and spirit that is unmistakably his own.

pitable to the relatively experimental work being done by the better-than-beginners.

I think another answer—I count it only one—might be given. Too many of the 50's and 60's people may have lingered too long in the places that gave them birth, nursed them, praised them for partial accomplishment. In time the partial accomplishment that brought them to first attention may have come to seem enough; working in familiar surroundings, with partners as sympathetic to effort as to achievement, before audiences prepared to accept fledgling work and even dedicated to seeking it out, is a great deal more comfortable—and safer—than tackling the possibly hostile unknown. One can tell oneself, after all, that what is done in limited situations for limited audiences is superior to the gross commercialism that inevitably attaches itself to any more sizable try. And development can stop right there.

Development comes from constantly increasing the size of the challenge. And though larger theaters, larger audiences, do in fact embroil writers in commercial hazards of many a sort, no writer need take the plunge—nor should he—for the money that "A Chorus Line" is going to earn. He should do it for the massed people he must face, in their diversity, in their varying tastes, in their show-me sluggishness and their universal capacity for being electrified. They're only people; there's just a bigger bunch of them, demanding—if all are to be satisfied simultaneously—a bigger play. If our one-time young hopefuls have not produced the "big" plays expected of them, it's possibly because too many of them kept on playing it small, small and secure.

It's true that Broadway—certainly the Broadway of the 60's—was in no mood for "experiment." Broadway in the 60's was dying on the vine and couldn't even find customers for the commercial materials in which it was supposed to wallow. At the moment, that's all changed. With audiences running back to the theater (where had they been?), with productions being snatched from here, there and everywhere (including downtown workshops and out-of-town tryout centers), with all doors open and even the unlikeliest comers welcome, the opportunities for writers to jump in, mingle, and—let us pray—grow are greater than they have been in many, many years. Seize 'em, I say.

If there ever was a time, it's now.

La Guardia and Morris—"visionaries"

tions that Morris sounded out for support on the City Center idea were labor unions, many, such as the International Ladies Garment Workers Union and the United Hebrew Trades, still close to their Socialist origins. As late as 1952, Jacob Potofsky, the head of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, resigned from the City Center Board in protest over the City Ballet's visit to Franco Spain.

The City Center has lost this ideological fervor—which is understandable, although lamentable. The presence of the unions at the City Center's founding helped shape its character. Snobbery was always absent and "culture for the masses" was taken seriously.

In its brighter days, the City Center was a cultural beehive: a drama company, a light-opera troupe, a Gilbert and Sullivan troupe and a symphony orchestra. All this has now changed. The sole survivors are the City Ballet and the City Opera, for which it was the fund-raising arm. It has withdrawn support from Joffrey and Ailey. But, more significantly, it is no longer the fund-raising arm for the opera and ballet companies.

Money, of course, is the explanation for this turn of events. With increased costs at the more expensive State Theater, to which the City Ballet and City Opera moved in the 1960's, and with the expansion of programs at 55th Street, the City Center proved unable to support at both houses.

The choice of whom to support was made by Foundation, which in 1974 bailed out the City B the City Opera with a $6.3-million grant that bypa City Center's central administration. Under these matching funds from the public must be channeled to the opera and ballet companies rather than to the common pot of the City Center. The City Ballet, for now has an operating bank account that is distinct City Center's own operating account. This enables Foundation to keep the accounts clear—to see money is going where it has been earmarked. It al that the City Center central account has been de cannot, as it admitted this spring, support the 55 house.

There is a view that the Ford Foundation ha the friendly undertaker in the City Center saga. Ballet and the City Opera, which now also have t boards, may have been saved at the expense of Center idea. Yet, whether it should be praised or the Ford Foundation has been correct in gaugi sentiment. Although the 55th Street house was lar last year, there was no public outcry.

In part, some of the City Center's past functi been taken on by the Brooklyn Academy of Music academy's philosophy of public service in the arts defined. To qualify for government grants, it pe community service by presenting attractions tha special interest: for example, a Jamaican dance com the local Jamaican community. But this is not ne the audience that attends the academy's presentati Royal Shakespeare Company. The academy serve constituencies, which is all well and good. Yet, worth of a performing arts center is the creativity

It is no accident that the sole survivors of the Center are its two foremost creative institutions— the City Ballet, which produced a totally new rep ballet. If the City Center can no longer afford to be to other creative groups, surely there is room for institution to take its place in this city.

A Last Talk With Piatigorsky

By BERNARD ROSENBERG AND DEENA ROSENBERG

Gregor Piatigorsky, who died last month, was interviewed by Bernard Rosenberg and Deena Rosenbrg in April 1975 as part of the Project for the Oral History of Music in America at the City University of New York. The following is an excerpted version of the interview.

"I must say I have had an extremely hard life, hard but fascinating. As a little boy in Russia, I heard music at home all the time. My parents played, without really being musicians. They didn't especially encourage or discourage me to become a musician—I was absolutely determined about that myself at an early age.

Before starting the cello, I played a little piano and violin. The cello was too big for me at first. But it was soon my favorite string instrument. I found it the richest of the strings, with the biggest range and the most extraordinary possibilities.

I started to earn money for the family before I was eight years old. As a youngster I had all kinds of jobs. I even wrote music for the silent movies, in Russia, when I was nine or ten years old, and later in Paris. Before I knew much about love and kisses, I had to put music together so people would respond romantically. Oh, I have done many things. . .

'I have only wished to be a good servant of music.'

My formal education approaches zero. How could I coordinate school with work in night clubs and other such places? I was forced into a kind of self-education. I sought the company of people from whom I could learn something. I was ashamed of my ignorance, of not even knowing elementary geography. I must have been quite a bore to some very nice people. I would come to them with strange questions: What is life? What is love? What is hate? Fortunately, a few wonderful people were not put off by my questions. I was interested in so many things, and I never had time for them all.

I ran away from Russia, to Germany, before my 12th birthday. The revolution sped me on my way. At that time, I had no sense of geography, of where I was going. I only knew that I had left Russia.

No matter what part of the world you inhabit, if you are a musician, you live in music. But I was never totally one-sided, and in Germany one needed to learn a lot. First there was the language, the literature—Goethe and so many other great writers.

Imagine: There I was in the midst of the rich Weimar culture of the 20's, with a chance to pursue many other interests besides music — literature, politics, oceanography, and so on. I must say, my favorite sport was to sit and to think, or alternatively, to walk and to think.

While still very young, I became the first cellist of the Berlin Philharmonic, where I remained for several years. It was difficult to concertize as a soloist and at the same time to play in an orchestra. But those in charge of the Philharmonic were marvelous about my doing both; I had full freedom. It was fine. I ate. I worked. I'll soon be 72 and I still don't know the meaning of the word vacation. I just can't understand it.

Life in Germany, for any musician, let alone a Jewish musician, became impossible under Hitler. One couldn't stay there. It was barbaric. Artists were stifled. You know, music, art—these are not just little decorations to make life prettier. They're very deep necessities, which people cannot live without. And every musician, every artist, has a heavy responsibility. Though not all of them realize this, to be true to art they must really forget themselves and devote their lives to something larger in which they believe. Just look who stands out in the history of humanity. It's hard to discover who was the richest man in the Middle Ages, and you cannot easily remember the names of all the kings and princes of the Renaissance; there were quite a number of them, but now they hardly matter. But who will ever forget Michaelangelo, and later, Mozart or Beethoven? We can judge the whole history of mankind by such great people. We see that art is what matters. It may not look that way at the moment; people are much more ashamed to feel anything now than they were in the past. Children must be rough and tough. If they talk about flowers, they're considered sissies, and poets are called softies. We should remind ourselves that their greatest strength may lie precisely in so-called softness.

From the beginning, I have only wished to be a good servant of music, a good servant in any capacity. I don't know how to pinpoint exactly what I am. You know, I think I'm simply a musician—not "chamber musician," not a "soloist." "Musician" is a real category; I am not so sure about the

Lots of recent pieces are full of gadgets—electronics and all that. Too many people are annotating music, just making noise. But I have always been very interested in contemporary work. We must remember, Mozart and Beethoven didn't hear all of the sounds we hear. They never heard the sound of a car motor starting running, grinding, stopping. They never heard a telephone ring, or an airplane roar. It's like painters who didn't see what our astronauts have seen. In every period, there are thousands of new sounds, thousands of new vistas. So how can one be super-conservative and say, "I'm just used to some music that I call classical, and it's the only good music."

In point of fact, I have played new music all my life, although people sometimes laughed, especially once in Berlin, let's see, in 1926, I think. I was always curious, and some works fascinated me. Schoenberg's "Pierrot Lunaire," for instance. I remember the first performance in Berlin, with Artur Schnabel at the piano, Fritz Stiedry conducting, in 1923. We got a big standing ovation because it was a home product.

Schnabel and I played a lot together. We had a regular trio: Schnabel, piano, Prof. Carl Flesch, violin, and me, cello. We travelled a great deal all over Europe. The group itself didn't have a name—we were just known as Schnabel, Flesch and Piatigorsky. Schnabel and Flesch were much older than I, and we never played as a trio in America. But later, Vladimir Horowitz, Nathan Milstein and I, pretty much the same age, played together, here and in Europe. Rubinstein and Heifetz were my partners in my last regular trio; we played together only in America.

When impresarios were sending me 'round and 'round, I did, oh, 100, 120 concerts a year. Before starting at USC, I still travelled most of the time. Years ago, I used to have a manager; now I don't want one. The most frustrating part of being a musician is that someone is always "selling" you. And I'd rather not travel like a madman, as I used to do.

Sometimes I didn't know where I was. Once I played in London, I think on Monday, and on Tuesday I had a rehearsal in Missouri with the St. Louis Symphony. Imagine the time difference, jet lag, and all that. For me, it's, shall we say, less than ideal to live this way. I realize, though, that some people love it. They are mostly the young but already famous musicians. Some, for instance, Barenboim, can tell you exact schedules for concerts around the world, months, years in advance.

It's fantastic how the youngsters come and go. I played some concerts in Israel—"chamber music," as it's called—with Barenboim and Pinky Zukerman. Think of this: There I am. I look out the window 30 minutes before the concert, and there's Pinky playing tennis —but he comes to the concert on time, and everything's fine. This is so different from older musicians, who generally have to think and compose themselves. They sit around for hours before a concert. It's as if they face a tremendous ordeal every time. But also, they like to sit and talk. All they want is more time. Oh, there's a lot to discuss. . .

Today, everyone's in such a hurry. Recently, I went to Washington to play with the Israel Philharmonic under Mehta. So I arrive there the day of the concert, not knowing when the rehearsal is, where the concert is, and what time it is to take place. As it turned out, I just had time to arrive and say a quick "hello, how are you, everything is fine with me," to my friends. Then we tuned our instruments, rehearsed, and played the concert. This isn't so bad if you're playing with friends, with good musicians—an orchestra of people who know what you want in a performance. But it's so fast!

In my youth there was time. We didn't produce instant concerts. There were no airplanes. You arrived a few days before the concert. You went to look at the hall. You made new acquaintances, spoke to interesting people; you walked around. You saw how people lived. You got more out of life. As the speed and communication increased it became: airport, hotel, concert hall, and that's that. Instead of being able to describe a town, I can only describe its airport: "Well, that airport was very bad. You have to walk for 40 minutes, and then drive to town, which takes an hour and a half . . ." What a big change!

To me, my work is life-giving, but you cannot live only for yourself. In the end, everything you see and hear is for people—not only the table, the ashtray, and so on, but art and music as well. Music makes life better. People who have no contact with music are to be pitied. Music is a necessity. It is rich. It is imaginative. It is magnificent. And it is for everyone.

Shooting 'The Deep' in A Million-Dollar Pool

deck and speaks into a microphone, and two mounted loudspeakers on the floor of the underwater set transmit the muffled observation to the cast and crew. A few minutes later, Yates speaks into the microphone tucked into his diving mask. "Roll. Camera. Action," can be faintly made out from above. Then there is absolute silence once again. An occasional air bubble rising to the surface is the only indication that a multi-million dollar film is being made 30 feet below.

Peter Benchley, the man responsible for it all, ambles by, leans over and peers into the water. "I'm here just for the fun," he says.

Part of his fun has involved deep-sea diving, as opposed to "Deep" set diving. Yet he seems puzzled when asked if he is a good diver. "There is no such thing as a good diver," he says finally, and then ponders the question a bit more. "I suppose if you can go out in the morning and come back at night, then you are a good diver."

Having spoken the last word on diving, he moves on.

For most of the afternoon, the flaxen haired Nick Nolte has been sitting quietly sipping rum from a paper cup. That morning, he had played an underwater scene during which an explosion had propelled him through the bottom of a sunken ship. Although the experience has left him exhausted, he has had even more harrowing moments. "I was 50 feet down and the mouthpiece on my breathing apparatus broke off," he recalls. "I spit it out and grabbed the tube and tried to take a breath and I got nothing but salt water. I couldn't see a thing and I swam into the camera. The cameraman stayed with the action, probably saying to himself, 'The guy's really drowning and I'm getting it on film!' Fortunately, six guys turned up with breathing hoses."

Nolte looks up and discovers that Robert Shaw, the shark hunter who was gobbled up at the end of "Jaws," has been listening to his story. With a sardonic smile Shaw—who plays a reclusive lighthouse keeper in "The Deep," grabs Nolte's paper cup and takes a swig from it. "Do you realize that this man is perhaps the most talented young actor in America?" Shaw says, gesturing toward Nolte. "There is only one problem though. It's a problem I had in my thirties and I had in my forties. I didn't have it in my twenties because I couldn't afford it. It's certainly a problem that I'm going to have in my fifties, though—I drink too much!"

Shaw pauses a moment. "Will you tell me one great actor who doesn't drink? But Nick and I are both brave. If there's a dare, we'll do it. I don't think either of us lacks courage. That's not our problem. What we lack is sense! We'd take on Evil Kneivel, wouldn't we?

"When Nick and I go down into the water, we can never hear one word anyone says. We just pretend that we know what we're doing. They always say it's marvelous. Do you know why? Because Nick is very masculine. Because we're both macho!"

Nolte reaches up and takes his cup of rum from Shaw.

"Don't spill any of it," Shaw hisses. "They've spent millions on water, but precious little on booze!"

Reels of Dance Rarities At Lincoln Center

the fact that Ruth St. Denis can be viewed in a revival of her early "Red and Gold Sari," or that Ted Shawn can be seen dancing his mystical solos, "Cosmic Dance of Shiva" and "Whirling Dervish." Certainly, the most exciting "home movies" in the collection are those that Shawn and Miss St. Denis shot during their company's tour of Asia in 1925 and 1926. In addition to showing the actual Javanese and Burmese dances which influenced the company so profoundly, this footage also contains informal shots of Shawn and Miss St. Denis shopping in bazaars, riding in rickshaws and meeting the maharajah of Kashmir.

Proceeding chronologically, one can see Martha Graham, fresh out of Denishawn and still very much influenced by Miss St. Denis, dancing her own first work of solo choreography, "Flute of Krishna"(1926). There are also films of Miss Graham in her "Lamentation" (1930), and "Night Journey" (1947), in which she dances Jocasta to Bertram Ross' Oedipus.

Representing modern dance at the turn of the next decade are films of Anna Sokolow's haunting "Lyric Suite" and José Limón's highly formal "condensation" of Othello, "The Moor's Pavane" (featuring Limón, Pauline Koner and Lucas Hoving). The influence of modern dance on ballet at this time can be seen in a videotape of Agnes de Mille's delightful "Three Virgins and a Devil" (which the vigilant moral guardians at CBS retitled "Three Maidens and a Devil" for television.) The "Maidens" in this 1953 TV version were Miss de Mille, Lucia Chase and Janet Reed.

The archives' excerpt from Merce Cunningham's 1953 "Septet," with Carolyn Brown, Cunningham, and Remy Charlip, illustrates this choreographer's pivotal role in bringing about a whole new relationship between ballet and modern dance. In "Septet," Cunningham may well be gently mocking balletic conventions; but in the process of doing so, he is also breaking with the "elemental" emphasis on gravity which had traditionally characterized modern dance.

Post-Cunningham modern dance is not especially well represented; but here, too, the collection is full of quirky surprises. Fans of Twyla Tharp may be amazed (as I was) to learn that the collection owns a film version of Miss Tharp's first choreographic effort, an austere and almost puritanically unphysical piece called "Tank Dive" (1965). Other significant avant-garde landmarks preserved (at least partially) on film include Meredith Monk's "Juice" and Yvonne Rainer's "Continuous Project Altered Daily" (which employed many performers who still appear with The Grand Union).

Needless to say, there is much more in this extraordinary film collection. If you're interested in knowing whether or not the library owns footage of a particular dance, dancer, company, or type of dance, call the Dance Collection at 799-2200, extension 228 or 229. (When reserving a film, it's best to call about a week in advance.) The Collection is open from noon to 6 P.M. Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday and from noon to 8 on Monday and Thursday.

For a real sense of the incredible richness of this collection the visitor should spend an afternoon browsing through the automated book catalog. After an hour or so one realizes why Lincoln Kirstein calls the film archive "the most vivid, useful and used testimony to skill in performance that has ever been planned and executed."

The 'Watercolorgate' Affair in London

turned the stage of the Royal Court into a showcase for gritty and unpredictable talent.

Recently, in the Royal Court's Theater Upstairs—a 66-seat arena for experimental drama — a play quietly opened that deals with a youth who loses a leg in a pub bombing. It sounds grim—it is grim—yet the 80-minute drama, "Just a Little Bit Less Than Normal," has earned wide critical acclaim and, in an otherwise tepid theater season, has emerged as one of the most vivid original plays of the year. "It is an extraordinary experience by an exciting new playwright," said The Observer. "This is the grimmest play in London," said The Guardian. "It may be flawed in its writing and characterization but its nagging urgency, its angry courage in dealing with a taboo subject, its success in creating convincing laughter from the ashes does show the theater's residual value in dealing with those issues which other media often shelve."

The play, by 26-year-old actor Nigel Baldwin, centers on a popular working-class youth—he has a job, a steady girlfriend, is a member of a local football club—whose life is shattered when an I.R.A. bomb explodes in a London pub, blowing his left leg away. When we meet him, he is scarred even more mentally than physically, and his awkward attempts at readjustment, at trying to deal with his wound, are brutally punished. His ghastly mother, full of piety and ignorance, offers him the euphemism from which the play derives its title ("You're not a cripple, son, you're just a little bit less than normal"). His friends turn taunting and vicious. His girlfriend—caught between pity and love—endures his furious anguish and finally runs off with his best friend. By the end, the youth is overwhelmed with despair.

The play's theme—the way society punishes and seeks to rid itself of anyone different or not "normal"—is only tenuously explored, a flaw in the drama. Yet the play touches raw nerves. It is painful to watch, but riveting.

existing female string quartet, the Primavera, on hand for the Oct. 29 concert (an earlier women's quartet forfeited its status recently by substituting two male members).

A substantial portion of the cost of the series has been met by funds from the American Music Center, and the organizers hope that next year they can afford larger performing groups and an even greater variety of music.

Day for Celebration

Friday, Oct. 1, is International Music Day—a celebration initiated last year by the International Music Council (an offspring of UNESCO) and scheduled for annual worldwide observances on this date. It is a fact of life that such occasions don't get up much steam unless they can claim the attention of a dedicated individual willing to go tirelessly through the maze of organizational ritual required to get the ball rolling. International Music Day has such an individual in the person of Mrs. Merle Montgomery, president of the U.S. National Music Council, who is responsible for arranging the principal U.S. observance of Music Day this year —the appearance at Kennedy Center of 480 young musicians from the State of Oklahoma, who are traveling to Washington on a $50,000 fund designated by their state legislature.

Dr. Montgomery got a $200,000 grant from Exxon at the start of the year to sponsor appearances by groups at Kennedy Center the Bicentennial; the Olds certs are part of that serie administered by the Nationa of Music Clubs, and to the homans falls the honor of under the patronage of Pr Mrs. Ford—a special I Music Day dispensation.

Chairman of Music Day the U.S. is Stanley Adam of the American Society of Authors and Publishers. Adams and Dr. Montgome music has the power to " togeth r—a link that mat tant as anything done b and statesmen."

And we are very big on think-pieces, because (a) we would like to be taken seriously, to believe that we stand on some pertinent relation to the dunes of the culture at large; and (b) for so much of the time there is so much that is fatuous that one is forced to think whether or not one is inclined or equipped to. Think-pieces are often characterized by a borrowing of fictional devices—the parody, say, of a Barthelme short story—to prove that one is literate.

Election years are nice because there are at least three articles, and as many as seven, we can write by rote. How did the networks cover the Democrat and Republican conventions, and election night? How did they prepare to cover those conventions and that night? What egregious effect did their coverage of the primaries have on the nominating process itself?

Otherwise it is recumbent upon us (since television reviewers take everything lying down) to wait for accidents. One could, for example, do a column comparing the local late-night television news coverage of the death of Mao with the coverage of that rumble in black and white in Washington Square. Videotaped post mortems on babies locked alone in cellars while houses burn down are also always good for an essay on the invasion of grief. An earthquake or Ilie Nastase helps.

The fact is that television reviewers do not watch the same television that the rest of the country is watching. Having declared our enthusiasms and dismays early each season, we go on to look for the unusual or the outrageous or the ambitious and expensive, anything that will allow us to flex and jitter and moralize and blab knowledgeably.

Whereas most watchers of television —most Americans—experience something entirely different, I suspect. I suspect so because I've spent the last six weeks in such a disorder of my personal and professional lives that I have gone to television not in search of fertilizer for growing an opinion, but for any sort of distraction I might find. Strangers troop in and out of my house and soul, tearing holes in the walls. I am stiff with the pitch of wood, coated in plaster dust, spackled, wireless, a refugee among leftovers of this debauch or that debacle, souvenirs of a shaky self. To open a closet is like opening a vein.

And television talks to me. Reruns, late movies, baseball games, quiz shows, weather reports—it is a climate, a weather. It rains distraction on me, tans the hide of mind. It is various and undemanding—the old West, the Far East, Mr. Spock, Groucho Marx. I do not expand, but I acquiesce. The pulp imagination is as much as, and perhaps more than, I can handle while wearing the sneakers of my fatigue. Loyal, obedient—and I don't have to walk it on the dangerous city streets. Whoever was in charge of Channel 5's 11:30 P.M. movies, until the mysterious appearance this week of the Lorenzo and Henrietta Music variety show, seems to have Xeroxed my astral aura, my psychic blueprint. I don't even have to dream up ways of expressing my gratitude.

All, for the moment, is forgiven. When life is too much, television is enough, an uncritical friend, not a "special" or a think-piece or an earthquake or a parody, but one of the few things around that can't be blamed on me and wants very much to please. And so, before having to review the forthcoming season, I want to say thank you. ■

Here Come the New Prime-Time Series

During the next fortnight, as the networks unveil this season's weekly fare, some familiar faces, along with some newcomers, will be seen in fresh surroundings.

Tony Randall, center, plays a widower judge with two children, Thursdays at 9 P.M. on ABC. Sada Thompson, below, returns in ABC's "Family," which will make its season's debut next Tuesday, Sept. 28, at 10 P.M.

Bernadette Peters focuses on Richard Crenna in CBS's new sit-com "All's Fair," starting tomorrow at 9:30 P.M.

Linda Lavin, left, waits on love in CBS's "Alice," making its debut Wednesday, Sept. 29, at 9:30 P.M.

...ontinues to percolate, the latest project ...elefrance-USA," an electronic ragout of French programming that will be carried Sundays and Wednesdays at 10 P.M. on Channel 10 of both systems in Manhattan. The hustling entrepreneur behind this venture is a 32-year-old Frenchman named Jean-Claude Baker. Born Jean-Claude Rouzaud in Dijon, he and his family were deserted by his father and, on eventually reaching Paris in his early teens, he was taken under the protective care of the late Josephine Baker, the American entertainer who adopted a "Baker's dozen" (Jean-Claude was No. 13) of homeless youngsters.

Miss Baker sent Jean-Claude to Liverpool to work in a hotel and to learn English. There he also met a new rock group called the Beatles and their manager, Brian Epstein. Later, he was sent to Berlin to work in a restaurant and to learn German. Soon, however, in his early 20's, the energetic wanderer was the owner of his own club/discotheque, Pimm's, which became a magnet for celebrities in Berlin. The money he acquired from the club and the adjacent Pimm's Boutique is being used to launch this cable series.

On Wednesdays, "Telefrance-USA" will be strictly for French-speaking audiences. On Sundays, the subtitled content will be aimed at the English-speaking Francophile. With Mr. Baker as host, the programs will include French-related news, interviews, dramas from French television and, of course, films, including some American movies that have been dubbed into French. Material is being obtained not only from France but from Canada and Switzerland.

Will the venture work? Only time will tell. A somewhat similar plan involving German programming faltered last season, but Mr. Baker insists he can avoid the business mistakes the German producers made on that one. And, so far, "Telefrance-USA" is receiving encouraging cooperation, particularly from French television executives and a number of prestigious "sponsors," including Cartier and Yves St. Laurent. If energy, charm and elegance constitute a magic formula, Mr. Baker should have no problem. At an impressive party launching the series, which is set for at least 13 weeks, the young impresario had arranged for smart entertainment (the legendary Bricktop singing "It Had to Be You" accompanied by the legendary jazz violin of Stephane Grappelli) while cable executives sipped French wine amid chic guests with tee-shirts promoting Renault cars. He is obviously a salesman—how you say?—extraordinaire.

He is not, however, out of the software woods. Among other things, he has discovered that the rights to many French films (for instance, those of Janus Films) are already tied up elsewhere. He has, in other words, run into one of the more crucial problems confronting cable on all levels, including the most sensitive one of pay TV. There are Federal Communication Commission rules that supposedly make new films available to pay-cable operators before they are shown on commercial television, but cable operators claim that in actual practice the situation is riddled with catch-22's.

In recent Washington hearings before the House Subcommittee on Communications, Ralph M. Baruch, the president of Viacom International, argued forcefully that the FCC should be barred from imposing any pay-cable rules in the absence of evidence that the public is thus being deprived of available programming. Needless to say, Viacom is attempting to establish a major position in the pay-cable field. One of its recent experiments in which separate fees were charged for specific programs in Smithtown, Long Island, failed. Viacom is currently launching an entertainment package called "Showtime" that includes the East Bay area of San Francisco in its marketing domain.

The ultimate shape that cable will assume is still highly unpredictable. The shrewd and knowledgeable Irving B. Kahn, the former Teleprompter president who was convicted in 1972 of bribing a small-town official in a bid for a cable franchise, has returned to the cable business by acquiring 13 film dramas made by American Film Theater and reselling them to Home Box Office, which is the supplier for 82 percent of the 830,000 pay-cable homes in the United States at present. In a past issue of Videography magazine, Mr. Kahn said: "Once you have the technology, making it happen is 95 percent of the job. That involves politics, promotion, financing—many other untechnical areas. Most of these are not controllable. . . . The only hope is to take generations of younger members of the industry and broadly expound your theories so that they at least become exposed to them."

In the coming October issue of the same publication, Harlan P. Kleiman, the former vice president of programming at Home Box Office, explores the problem of "Satisfying the Subscriber: Pay-TV's Greatest Challenge." Conceding the high incidence of "disconnects" among pay-cable subscribers, he notes that the pay-TV viewer watches more television daily than the regular broadcast viewer; television is already the most significant entertainment medium for this subscriber. Mr. Kleiman's conclusion: Most subscribers "expect pay TV to provide more heightened entertainment experiences than they are receiving from regular broadcast television. The need is for a different or heightened experience, for a new 'kick.'"

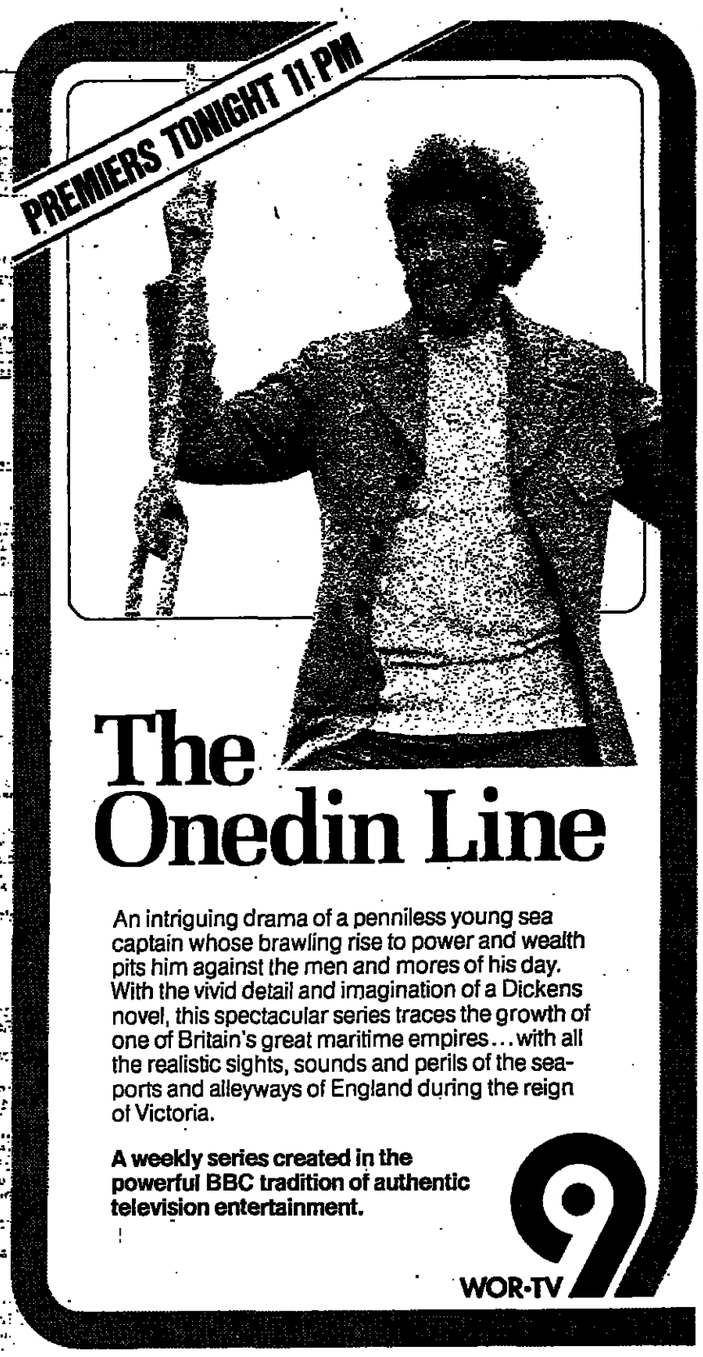
That much would seem logical, if not glaringly apparent. But heightened experiences are not easy to come by these days. A couple of months ago, Home Box Office did put together a weekend that included the film "Gone With the Wind," unedited and uninterrupted, plus an uncensored special featuring Bette Midler in concert performance. The combination was sensational but rare. The explorations continue, though, with promising sources of programming developing outside this country; Mr. Baker's "Telefrance-USA" is one example. The German series is reportedly about to be revived. Viacom's Mr. Baruch speaks of a series featuring opera productions or music specials made for, say, Italian television.

These concepts, of course, are and would be aimed at minority audiences, but an imaginative consortium of minority audiences could reach significant proportions. Meantime, an extensive tour of the electronic "global village" could provide American viewers with infinitely fresher criteria for quality programming.



The Onedin Line

An intriguing drama of a penniless young sea captain whose brawling rise to power and wealth pits him against the men and mores of his day. With the vivid detail and imagination of a Dickens novel, this spectacular series traces the growth of one of Britain's great maritime empires... with all the realistic sights, sounds and perils of the seaports and alleyways of England during the reign of Victoria.

A weekly series created in the powerful BBC tradition of authentic television entertainment.

Arts and Leisure Guide

Edited by ANN BARRY

Of Special Interest

Highlights in Jazz

This series commences on Wednesday at NYU's Loeb Student Center with performers and music that figured in last summer's Grande Parade du Jazz in Nice. The concert is a salute to Jelly Roll Morton, Scott Joplin, James P. Johnson and other innovators who composed from the earliest jazz era through the 1920's. Dick Hyman, the pianist, conductor and arranger who culled material he had done for the New York Jazz Repertory Company and Columbia recordings, will rendezvous with Pee Wee Erwin, trumpet; Milt Hinton, bass; Bob Rosengarden, drums; Vic Dickenson, trombone; Johnny Mince, clarinet; and singer Carrie Smith. (See Music)

The Barge Is Back

The New York State Bicentennial Barge, with its cargo of historical artifacts and memorabilia pertaining to New York during the Revolutionary Era, was launched as a floating museum at the South Street Seaport Museum in early June and, since that time, has traveled more than 3,000 miles over the waterways of New York State. This week the barge is back and will moor at local ports (see Art, Other) until Oct. 16, when she will anchor again at South Street and be feted by street performers, clowns and musical groups.

Morris at the Morgan

For anyone interested in the art of fine printing—a category which ought to include anyone interested in reading—the Morgan Library's fall exhibit, "William Morris and the Art of the Book," is not to be missed. Morris (1834-96) was a busy man: poet, novelist, translator (his autograph manuscript of "Beowulf" is in the show); designer and decorator of stained glass, tapestries and other furnishings; leader of social causes; collector of medieval illuminated manuscripts and early printing, printer, typographer, illustrator, calligrapher. These last aspects of his interests are what the Morgan show is all about. Included are outstanding books from his collection (among them a 13th-century English psalter, which he dubbed his "Windmill Psalter" because of the curious and charming introduction of the image on the second folio) and examples of his multifaceted work at Kelmscott Press, whose masterpiece was the Chaucer of 1896 (displayed at the Morgan in unbound pages interspersed with drawings by its woodcut-illustrator Sir Edward Burne-Jones). (See Art)

Early Bunuel

Tomorrow, and for the next three Mondays, four films by Luis Bunuel, made in Mexico during the late 1940's and early 1950's, will make their theatrical premiere in New York at the Carnegie Hall Cinema. More rugged than the classics for which the Spanish director became renowned (which will be shown later in the series), these films deal with the human experience in Latin America with melodramatic parody and buffoonery. (See Miscellany)

Unless otherwise noted, the critical judgments in this Guide reflect the published views of Times critics.

ME AND BESSIE—Linda Hopkins in the rags-to-riches-to-rags story of Bessie Smith. Clive Barnes thought that "a considerable effort has been made to give it the shape and substance of a genuine theatrical evening." Walter Kerr found that "while most of the songs are Bessie's, it is Miss Hopkins who is there on stage, assertive and smiling and unmistakably her own woman." Conceived by Will Holt and Miss Hopkins. Directed by Robert Greenwald. Edison, 240 W. 47th St. (PL 7-7164)

MY FAIR LADY—Ian Richardson, Christine Andreas, George Rose and Robert Coote in the 20th-anniversary production of the Alan Jay Lerner/Frederick Loewe musical, based on George Bernard Shaw's "Pygmalion." Directed by Jerry Adler. "It proves 20 years stronger, a show so dazzlingly melodic and visually rich in its first act that it scarcely needs a second—and a so emotionally binding in its second that you wonder why you were merely dazzled by the first." (Kerr) St. James, 246 W. 44th St. (OX 5-5858)

PIPPIN—A musical about Charlemagne's son (Pepin). Music and lyrics by Stephen Schwartz; directed and choreographed by Bob Fosse; Northern J. Calloway and Barry Williams have the feature roles. "What will certainly be memorable is the staging by Bob Fosse . . . It takes a painfully ordinary little show and launches it into space. This is fantastic." (Barnes) Imperial, 249 W. 45th St. (CO 5-2412)

THE DEBBIE REYNOLDS SHOW—A musical revue in which Miss Reynolds sings, dances and gives impersonations. Staged by Ron Lewis. Minskoff, Bway at 45th St. (869-0550)

THE RUNNER STUMBLES—Milan Stitt's first play about a priest accused of murdering a nun, which is, simultaneously, a love story about an impossible love, a psychological mystery and a reflective study of the strictures of religion. Directed by Austin Pendleton. "In this, his first play, Mr. Stitt has the restraint and sureness of an experienced dramatist. (Gussow) "An interesting first try," but "good climates aren't made of inexplicable oversights." (Kerr) Little, 240 W. 44th St. (221-6425)

SAME TIME, NEXT YEAR — Bernard Slade's Broadway debut play about a man (Ted Bessell) and a woman (Sandy Dennis) in a once-a-year monogamous adultery lasting from 1951 to 1975. Directed by Gene Saks. "A neatly functional sentimental comedy thoroughly conscientious about setting a laugh every 40 to 60 seconds." (Kerr) Atkinson, 256 W. 47th St. (CI 5-3430)

SHENANDOAH—A musical, set within the turmoil of the American Civil War, starring John Cullum. Directed by Philip Rose, music and lyrics by Gary Geld and Peter Udell. What the author-composers have done is "to seize upon the most commonplace of Saturday Evening Post covers, strip it of both gratification and the mockery we've progressively applied to it, and offer it as the original bare bones of legend." (Kerr) Alvin, 250 W. 52d St. (PL 7-8646)

STREAMERS — The conclusion of David Rabe's Vietnam trilogy, which is set in a barrack room and takes the interlinking themes of two minorities—homosexuals and blacks—to indicate the sudden awful pressures that can detonate a disaster. Directed by Mike Nichols. "Taut as a bowstring, provocative as the unfathomable mystery of personality is always provocative." (Kerr) Also, the play is performed "with energy and sensitive warmth under Mr. Nichols's probing-in-a-scalpel stage direction." Newhouse, 150 W. 65th St. (ER 2-7616)

THE THREEPENNY OPERA—The Bertolt Brecht and Kurt Weill modern classic in a new translation by Ralph Manheim and John Willett. Directed by Richard Foreman; with Raul Julia, C.K. Alexander, Elizabeth Wilson, Roy Brocksmith, Ellen Green. Presented by Joseph Papp's New York Shakespeare Festival. Clive Barnes: "The most interesting and original thing Mr. Papp has produced since he set up shop at the Vivian Beaumont three seasons ago." Walter Kerr: "It'll leave you slack—except for the satisfaction your eye may take in Mr. Foreman's firm proletarianism and the certainty that any moment now Mr. Weill will be heard from again." Beaumont, 150 W. 65th St. (ER 2-7616)

...and Monique van de Ven in ..." a Dutch film which opens ... the 68th Street Playhouse

THE WIZ—The Tony-winning all-black musical version of "The Wizard of Oz," directed by Geoffrey Holder. "Everything is done confidently . . . It just doesn't have firm ground beneath it to say where it's come from: Kansas, Harlem, M-G-M, or a kiddies' matinee." (Kerr) Majestic, 247 W. 44th St. (CI 6-0730)

Now Previewing

OH! CALCUTTA!—The erotic musical devised by Kenneth Tynan, with sketches by, among others, Sam Shepard, Sherman Yellen and Dan Greenburg. Music by Peter Schickele, Robert Dennis and Stanley Walden. Directed by Jacques Levy. Edison, 240 W. 47th St. (PL 7-7164) Public performances begin Fri.

Off Broadway

(Many of the following productions are offered only on certain days of the week.)

BOY MEETS BOY—A musical comedy about the 30's, which is a homosexual spoof of the "boy meets girl" situation. With book by Bill Solly and Donald Ward, music and lyrics by Mr. Solly. Directed by Ron Troutman. "A feeble takeoff." (Gussow) Actors Playhouse, 100 Seventh Ave. (242-9657)

THE FANTASTICKS—Boy meets girl, boy loses girl, boy gets girl—which proceedings are accompanied by some unforgettable tunes. The Tom Jones-Harvey Schmidt creation is the longest-running show in American theater history. Sullivan Street Playhouse, 181 Sullivan St. (OR 4-3838)

THE NEW MAN—A two-act comedy by John von Hartz, focusing on the office politics of the workers in a Manhattan publishing company. "The playwright shrewdly satirizes . . . The actors take the correct approach toward the material: total conviction even when most manic. George Allison Elmer's direction is resourceful." (Gussow) No Smoking Playhouse, 17 W. 24th St. (243-3973)

SEXUAL PERVERSITY IN CHICAGO—A play by David Mamet (preceded on the bill by a two-men-on-a-park-bench play, "Duck Variations"). "Narrative here is elliptical, unimportant, not much more than lightning-flash allusions into the sexual enthusiasms and hostilities briefly generated by two young men, two young women. . . . Out of the tropisk, some outrageously funny things come." (Kerr) Directed by Albert Takazauckas. Cherry Lane, 38 Commerce St. (989-2020)

TUSCALOOSA'S CALLING ME—"A breezy unpretentious, thoroughly engaging little revue," with "brisk and riveting and combatively tuneful songs." (Kerr) Music and lyrics by Hank Beebe and Bill Heyer, directed and staged by James Hammerstein and Gui Andrisano, with a cast of three. Chelsea Westside, 407 W. 43d St. (541-8394)

VANITIES—Jack Heifner's "diverting account, certainly even a mildly honest account, of three girls on their long, sad journey from cheerleaders at high school to sorority queens and finally to ladies wanly reproaching the 30's with little more than their courage and their props to call their own." (Barnes) "An evening I heartily recommend." (Kerr) A joint venture of Robert Kalfin's Chelsea Theater, Playwrights Horizon, and the Lion Theater Company from Queens. Directed by Garland Wright. Chelsea Westside, 407 W. 43d St. (541-8394)

WOMEN BEHIND BARS—A comedy by Tom Eyen, starring Divine. Directed by Ron Link. Truck and Warehouse, 79 E. 4th St. (777-8140)

Off Off Broadway

(Many of the following productions are offered only on certain days of the week.)

THE COLLECTOR—A dramatized version of John Fowles's book about an English clerk who kidnaps an art-school student. Directed by Alan A. Gabor. "The Greenwich Mews production gives us nothing but externals and for the most part, it gives them badly." (Eder) Greenwich Mews, 141 W. 13th St. (CH 3-6800)

COME BACK, LITTLE SHEBA—William Inge's play, directed by Katharine Faye. Malachy Company, 777 Tenth Ave. (245-9518) Opens Fri.

DESIGN FOR LIVING—Noel Coward's 1933 play about a three-sided love affair. Directed by Neil Weaver. Meat and Potatoes Company, 58 W. 39th St. (391-2346) Closes next Sun.

A DOCTOR'S DILEMMA—A play by George Bernard Shaw, directed by Arthur Kirson. Drama Committee, 17 W. 20th St. (929-8377)

A DROP IN THE PUDDING—A homosexual morality play, written by and starring Paul Vanase. Directed by Richard Roberts. Glines, 260 W. Bway. (925-2519)

Promenade sur la Côte d'Azur

Louis Fabien, a romantic in the School of Paris, has painted the Côte d'Azur from untamed St. Tropez to fanciful nights in Monte-Carlo. In an exhibition that promises to be talked about, France's prize-winning painter of pure color and shimmering sunlight, has captured with rare sensitivity, the spirit of the Côte d'Azur, its carefree lovers, its idle sunkissed days, its balmy Mediterranean nights.

has moved to new quarters at 25 East 83rd Street and will be open by appointment only to dealers, museums and collectors.

As one of the world's leading dealers in fine prints, we have always felt the responsibility to buy works in the best possible condition, to fully research these acquisitions, and to reject all dubious and questionable prints masquerading as original graphics. However, the dwindling availability of good prints at prices that would allow us to resell to our clients has necessitated a decision to take Reiss-Cohen private, and to conduct our business by appointment only. By doing this, we shall be able to offer the same quality graphics at far more attractive prices. As in the past, we shall continue to enhance the Reiss-Cohen collection through carefully chosen acquisition of works by:

ADA LOUISE HUXTABLE

Why You Always Win and Lose In Urban Renewal

Twenty years is a short time to see a dream of a renewed city realized; it is also a period richly instructive in the compromises necessary to make that dream come true. The gift arrives, and the package is full of surprises. The results are tinged with glory and frustration.

Twenty years ago I wandered Boston's downtown streets and fell in love with Quincy Market. It was in an obvious state of terminal decline and only a few historians and antiquarians were concerned about its survival. The urban renewal bulldozer was poised at its edge. Its 6.5 acres of seedy beauty, order and distinction were the subject of massive inattention.

Built to designs by Alexander Parris for Mayor Josiah Quincy in 1824-26, the group of market buildings near the waterfront—correctly called the Faneuil Hall Markets for their illustrious neighbor and predecessor—was not only the country's first large redevelopment project; it was also arguably its finest Greek Revival complex—then and now. A temple-like granite structure 535 feet long by 50 feet wide, with east and west porches of monolithic Doric columns and a central copper dome, is flanked by two long, harmonious 5-story granite blocks across wide streets. In the 1950's such treasures were being ritually sacked. But Quincy Market miraculously escaped that fate: on August 26, exactly 150 years to the day after it originally opened, it reopened triumphantly. The restoration is one of the stellar features of Boston's exemplary downtown renewal, a remarkably sensitive synthesis of new and old, from Faneuil to City Hall. I walk those streets now with particular pleasure. There is no impossible dream.

Then why did I spend my first hour in the restored market awash in nostalgia for old produce stalls, old wooden beams, old narrow stairs, chaotic pushcarts and the kind of honest shabbiness that is the antithesis of chic? Why did I respond with sympathy to the gentleman who asked with considerable anguish, "Where the hell are the vegetables?"

But the vegetables are there, and so are the flowers and the meat and the oysters and clams, as well as canvas bags and candles and crepes and ethnic food bars; they are there in the only context—elite, cleaned-up, skillfully merchandised settings—that will work economically, for expensively remodeled space, with appeal for the affluent and sophisticated public that can support such an enterprise today. You cannot ever really turn back the clock, or have things as they were. The appropriate resolution of the hard realities of necessary change are what preservation is all about.

And yet every "appropriate" solution kills the old buildings a little bit at the same time that it keeps them alive—a practical and philosophical paradox. And every "appropriate" solution must be accepted if urban beauty, amenity and history are to be retained at all. Here there is obvious tenant quality control, and an explosion of too-clever graphics. The dilemma, in the end, is balance. You win and you lose at the same time, and with luck, you mostly win. Quincy Market is a winner; the Saturday generation will probably take it over. After that first sad hour, I had a wonderful time.

Keeping such a superb urban complex and great architectural monument as a productive, functioning part of the city is fraught with promise and perils. No matter what I write of the anguish and politics, of the controversies and decisions, what credits are given, someone will correct the record. But one decision stands out clearly: in the mid-1960's, Edward Logue, then head of the Boston Redevelopment Authority, with the help of Walter Muir Whitehill and other historians, determined that the market complex was not expendable—one of his many bold, risky stands that paid off in Boston's brilliant downtown renewal.

Logue commissioned a $50,000 study which was carried out by a preservation-oriented development group, Architectural Heritage, Inc., under Roger Webb, the successful restorer-developer of the Old City Hall, and the Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities. The Cambridge architectural firm of Benjamin Thompson Associates was also proposing redevelopment. But from an office on the dusty, deserted top floor of the Quincy Market building, Mr. Webb produced an impressive five-volume feasibility study that earned a $2 million HUD preservation grant in 1969.

In 1970 the Boston Redevelopment Authority, under its new director, Robert T. Kenney, advertised for developers. Architectural Heritage lost out to Benjamin Thompson and Van Arkle-Moss as architects and developers. When Van Arkle-Moss could not meet the schedule and dropped out, a murky political donnybrook ensued, with Webb back in competition until Thompson produced the Rouse Company, developers of Columbia, Md., and many shopping centers. Rouse's commercial expertise, staff and capital, combined with Thompson's detailed architectural plans, carried the day in 1973. The developer has leased the building for 99 years from the city of Boston, with a guaranteed return to the city.

While these negotiations were proceeding, the B.R.A. "restored" the exteriors of the buildings according to a plan by architect-preservationist Theodore Stahl, which required the demolition of all additions and changes that had modified the original design. This embroiled the project in public and professional controversy about the amount of reconstruction involved. Some units are totally rebuilt. The new-old shells were then turned over to the Thompson-Rouse team.

It was agony all the way. First, the developer had to be innovative, since no conventional marketing or real estate precedents applied. There was the question of concept—with the decision made to keep the structures as open and related to the street and each other as possible. The buildings have been stripped, in many places, to a remarkable "skeleton" of granite—Parris used huge granite slabs and lintels unconventionally as support members for bearing walls, like structural timber or steel—and the granite-framed ground floor windows were left open. This gives the main market building interior continuity with the glass-canopy-covered "bull market," a kind of elegant pushcart market outside. There is no air-conditioning, but shutters and doors close these areas in cold weather, when they are heated. Mechanical equipment is exposed. A three-level, three-aisle, all year shopping center has been created as a colorful service anchor for the developing downtown community.

The second battle was over many-paned versus modern plate glass windows, with historians ranged obstinately against architects. The patently sensible but still debatable solution was the pivoting single pane window that is being used. A third fight revolved around street paving and trees. There is now a negotiated mix of granite blocks, brick, and cobblestones, shaded by black locusts, and the streets are closed to cars.

Another controversy surrounded the architects' desire to cut through the market building's upper floor to reveal the elliptical dome and create a focal central rotunda. It was done, and has proved a wise decision, although the "new" detailing could be less assertive. The superb Greek Revival detail of the dome helps re-establish the building's architectural character and the focus is both handsome and functional. Every decision has had to be a touchy compromise between historicism and rational reuse, tempered by practical economics.

Financing, conditioned by 10 years of local skepticism and a depressed real estate market, was balky and slow. Interestingly, the major part of it has come from New York. But the pieces are all in place now, the North and South Market buildings will open in 1977 and 1978 to complete the commercial complex, and the next generation will wonder what the struggle was all about. Today Quincy Market is a showpiece in a city of rich urban and esthetic rewards.

theon, $17.95), published to coincide with the exhibition—he draws a wonderful comparison between this underworld and the more glamorous and respectable beau monde. "There are many similarities between what we call the 'underworld' and the 'fashionable world,'" he writes. "Entry into both these exclusive societies, made up primarily of the idle, is not easy. Each has its regulations, its customs and usages, its moral code, its affairs of honor, whether its members settle them with sabers, pistols, or knives. If entry into 'high society' requires family crests, titles, diplomas from the best schools, wealth and fame, entry into the underworld requires widespread criminal activity, a police record full of arrests, and, of course, an illegitimate background, suspicious forebears, closely supervised training. Even the languages are similar, both tainted with snobbery. Just as the polished speech of men of the world is, at least in France, full of Anglicisms and fashionable catch phrases, so criminal slang, continually changing, is full of words newly coined from the streets of Paris. I even noticed that in the underworld some of the guys, out of pure snobbery, spoke a slang so hermetic that even their pals couldn't understand them. They had to translate their ideas into French to make themselves understood."

Brassaï goes on, in this passage, to talk about the inventiveness of this underworld language. "There is a plethora of synonyms for every kind of person, idea, or thing that touches the underworld. I've counted some of them: 20 expressions for the verb 'to love,' some 30 for 'to kiss,' a dozen for sexual arousal, the same number for ejaculation, more than 70 words—a record!—for the act of love. There are 50 words for the male sex organ, 15 for the testicles, 20 or so for the female organ," and so on. Brassaï, as anyone can see, is a wonderful writer, and his book, though well illustrated with his photographs of the period, is something more than the usual appendage to an exhibition. It is a beautiful memoir of the age and the society that is documented in the pictures, written with humor, precision and the narrative ease of a good novel.

Of course the writer, now in his 70's, is not quite the same man who took these photographs 40 years ago. The author of "The Secret Paris of the 30's," though no sentimentalist, takes a somewhat mellower view than the one we find in the pictures. But important clue to the pictures, I think, in th quoted above, for just as Brassaï had the special snobbery of the underworld and linguistic inventions that gave it expressio for the multitude of types that inhabited th up his camera in some curious places—the titute sitting on a bidet while her custor dressed is not everyone's idea of a grea photograph—but each of his pictures dis thing very individual, and together they gi the human comedy not to be seen in anythi concreteness and variety elsewhere. Brassa ize, is cataloguing his whores and their same patience and curiosity he brought to new words for the act of love.

"To the present generation," Brassaï these pictures seem as exotic as if they w or Zulus. Even more so." And so, indeed, more so than Brassaï's own easy conscience his camera on this "forbidden" world. "Rig I felt at the time," he writes, "that this unc represented Paris at its least cosmopolita alive, its most authentic, that in these colo underworld there had been preserved, fro almost without alteration, the folklore of i past."

So it was in Paris, in the third decade o tury, that the photographer re-enacted tha primitive that had for so long been one of peratives of modern culture. But the camer us something a little different: the chronicle very much tethered to the society of the ti later, Brassaï the writer sounds at times lik tired ethnographer, musing over tribal myt whereas Brassaï the photographer was alwa realist—wise, above all, about the workab

The 'Eye of Paris' Looks Inward

By MICHAEL PEPPIATT

PARIS

Brassaï has just turned 77, but a stroll with him around his beloved Montparnasse quickly reveals that his visual sense is as sharp as ever. He frequently urges you to savor some chance composition—such as a hand (dark, male and hairy) abandoned on a female bottom—with the obsessive glee of a man whose eyes have not stopped photographing the streets of Paris for half a century. His sense of fun and evident enjoyment of life make him astonishingly young. Yet he becomes above all someone who has lived through and recorded an epoch that already belongs to history.

Brassaï arrived in Paris in 1924, when he himself was 24 years old. He had left his native Transylvania (then Hungarian, now part of Rumania) with little more than a romantically artistic mien and a desire to become a painter in the great center of the arts. He plumped right away for Montparnasse and was quickly caught up in its effervescence of new ideas and attitudes. He was also lured away from painting. "With so many fascinating people around, from all over the world, how could I stay shut up alone in a studio with a canvas?" he puts it to you with his gregarious smile.

So he went out, and generally stayed out, moving from one cafe to the next, and meeting everyone—the new writers and painters, their girl friends and such legendary Montparnasse ladies as Kiki and Lily, the opium addicts. "I used to end up around four or five in the morning with coffee and croissants and the new day's paper," Brassaï recalls with relish. "Then I'd go back to my little hotel, and when I woke up and it was dark outside I never knew whether it was the same night or the next one."

Although Brassaï had actively disliked the idea of photography, he came to see it as the ideal medium for recording the spectacle of Paris, picturesque and poignant by turns, which riveted him each night. "I wanted to record the life in the streets around me, as Rembrandt and Goya, Daumier and Degas—I'm not making comparisons!—had done. And I realized that photography was truly an art of our time and the best way of capturing all the fleeting impressions which excited me."

From an observant noctambule, he turned into an eye, the "eye of Paris," as his friend Henry Miller was to call him. He seems, what's more, to have made himself invisible, so as to creep up on the seamier side of Paris and catch it unawares. Pimps, prostitutes, drug addicts, thieves, homosexuals, lesbians, tramps—every kind of social outcast—became his camera's favorite prey.

Brassaï's natural affability plus whatever he could give in tips helped him get near these frequently thin-skinned and dangerous birds of the night. "In some of the bars where the pimps and gangsters hung out, you could never be sure when someone might turn nasty," he explains. Several times he had his camera smashed, and once one of his subjects came at him with a knife swearing he would kill him (fortunately, he was persuaded to settle for cash). "I was very lucky to have got away with some of those shots. The only thing I regret, in fact, is not having photographed the really classy brothels of the day. You wouldn't believe how lavish and kinky they were!

"I loved that whole side of Paris at night—it was part of the reality of the city. I never went after subjects just because they were extraordinary. What interested me was their reality—even, in a way, their banality. That's why I never fully agreed with the Surrealists, who adored everything exotic and strange. I've always loved the ordinary, the everyday—because I think that, if you really look at them, they are so often the most astonishing things of all."

When he was not prowling around the red-light districts or recording an effect of mist and street lamps over the Seine, Brassaï was photographing his writer and artist friends. Looking at them today, one realizes with a start that one's mental picture of people like Picasso and Miller, Genet and Giacometti is sometimes based on a Brassaï portrait. As with his less well-known subjects, Brassaï has caught their most naked, everyday and undisguised selves.

Friendship has undoubtedly been one of Brassaï's talents in life. Of the thousands of volumes that line the apartment behind Montparnasse where he has lived since 1935, he visibly values above all the couple that contain scores of notes and letters to him from virtually all the major artistic figures of the time. He himself still bubbles with enthusiasm and laughter when he comes on a quip from Dali or a polished apology from Malraux.

His other talents, which include drawing, sculpture and writing, are no less evident. "When Picasso saw my drawings, he said to me, 'You should draw rather than photograph. You've got a gold mine in your drawings and yet you go on working a salt mine!'" More recently, hand to carving, and formed large pebbles pick beach into voluptuous f "I hate specialization," he ing you one of the well-ro to feel. A New Look At Bulbs for Spring

By MOLLY PRICE

This may be the year to break away from the old familiar varieties of tulips, hyacinths and daffodils. Try a little variation on the theme. Explore a , and create new combinations. n be a lifetime hobby if you enjoy s much as I do.

ake tulips, for instance. Like most eners, I always relied on the su- Darwins for late bloom and, for bloom, the 16-inch Tulipa foster- hybrid called Red Emperor which ms with the big Dutch crocuses early daffodils. Today there are a ber of other "Emperors" to choose , including white (Purissima), gold dbeater) and pink (Pinkeen or Sal- Trout) which has been described desperation, I think—as orange- se-pink. These hybrids vary from o 18 inches in height.

find the hybrids of T. greigii, with mental leaves handsomely streaked nottled in brown or purple, even e fascinating. And they are increas- popular for accents in the April en. Most, like Oriental Splendor Cape Cod, are combinations of red yellow, but Trinket is white with markings inside and out. And my rite Red Riding Hood is all red.

en there are both single and dou- lowered early tulips, 10 to 15 inch- all. These valuable tulips are so used today that many gardeners never seen them. They bloom with daffodils, the color selection is still rather good and the bulbs last for years.

I like to group both sorts in shades of yellow, orange and buff (such as the single Princess Irene and double Marechal Niel) in front of a light yellow forsythia along with white daffodils, violet-blue hyacinths and true-blue scillas. Some years all-white pansies join this throng.

Crosses between the scarlet T. fosteriana of Emporer tulip fame, and Darwin tulips, have resulted in a spectacular new tulip class of huge flowers on tall stems that begin to bloom toward the end of the daffodil season. (This past mixed-up spring, some of these varieties were in full flower in my garden on April 16.) They are called Darwin Hybrids, and the colors are mostly hot reds or electric combinations of red and yellow, but they are so magnificent that I must grow some. So I plant Gudoshnik (blended yellow peach and red, and extravagantly lovely) and General Eisenhower (brilliant orange-red) among grey boulders, along with wild blue phlox (P. divaricata) and grape hyacinths (Muscari armeniacum).

For a different grape hyacinth, try the much enlarged double form called Blue Spike with a profusion of florets rather like those of a double hyacinth. Another, M. tubergenianum, is a bicolor bred by the great Dutch firm of Van Tubergen with top florets of pure sky blue, and lower ones of a darker blue. The curious, foot-tall late-May-blooming feather or tassel hyacinth, Muscari comosum var. monstrosum, has flowers converted into tufts of long, lavender-blue filaments.

Among cottage tulips are two small groups of little known May-flowering novelties, the viridifloras and the multiflowering tulips. Both are highly desirable as accents in the border. The viridifloras have a right to be called green tulips, for the three outer segments of each variety are blazed with true leaf-green. Ivory-white and terra-cotta Angel (which becomes entirely green as the flower ages) and its sport called Golden Artist are my favorites. Artist is many colored—salmon, rose and red predominate.

In the multiflowered tulips group, some varieties such as the scarlet Amourette produce one large flower and, from branches on the main stem, three to five smaller blossoms. Others, like the clear yellow, red-edged Georgette, bear a bouquet of several good-sized flowers. Just a few bulbs of these tulips will make a good showing. Colors range from the warm white of Ivory Towers to the gleaming mahogany-purple of Mahogany Prince.

Bloom-time of the lily-flowered tulips overlaps that of the Darwin hybrids and the late Darwin and cottage tulips. Their flowers are longer and narrower than those of the Darwins. The gracefulness of the long, tapering and slightly reflexed segments produces an airy effect that one does not expect from tulips.

Flowers of some varieties, such as Mariette, last a long time—often more than three weeks. This favorite has very large satiny flowers of bright rose-pink. Red Shine is a deep glowing red with a blue base. West Point, with large and much reflexed flowers is probably the finest yellow—a deep shade of primrose. It combines beautifully with the slightly taller White Triumphator.

Setting Up a Darkroom

A workable home darkroom that will add hours of engrossing and creative pleasure to the photographic hobby can be set up by almost anyone—regardless of whether it is only a simple setup that makes temporary use of an apartment bathroom or kitchen, or a larger and more permanent facility that the photographer builds into his home basement.

In recent years there has been a technological explosion of new darkroom products to make things easier for the home processor, so darkrooms can be designed to work equally well with color or black-and-white.

Apartment darkrooms are most often set up in either the kitchen or the bathroom, and of the two the bathroom setup usually presents the greatest problem—lack of adequate space. Since the enlarger is one of the bulkiest pieces of equipment, a location for this needs to be selected first. In most cases the best place for this is on top of the sink, and the easiest way to utilize this area is to cover the sink with a piece of ¾-inch thick plywood. The board should be slotted to fit around the faucets, which will also help to stabilize it. The toilet seat should be covered with a piece of plywood about two feet square to provide a small work area that will hold enlarging paper, dodging tools, dusting cleaning brushes, small penlight, and timer. The bathtub is covered with a sheet of ¾-inch plywood about two feet wide and slightly longer than the tub. This will be the "wet" area which will hold a color drum with the necessary chemicals (for color) or trays for black and white. For print washing we can use the tub itself, or a large tray inside it with a print washing accessory such as the Kodak tray siphon.

The small window found in many bathrooms is easily covered with an opaque window shade and the edges of the shade taped down with black masking tape to seal off the light coming in around the edges. (The masking tape peels off easily afterwards without marring painted surfaces.) Another method is to construct a light-tight frame for the window which can be stored after use. Light leaking around the edges of the door may be blocked with strips of insulating foam (available in hardware stores).

The kitchen darkroom is much more convenient than the bathroom. For one, the sink countertop provides a ready-to-use base for the enlarger and a built-in work surface for drum, trays, and other paraphernalia. If the kitchen has no door you may have to have an opaque shade cut to size, then seal the edges with black masking tape. Another method is to use opaque curtain material weighted at the bottom, that overlaps the door frame. Windows can be covered the same way as in a bathroom type darkroom.

A basement darkroom can be as small as 6x8 feet, or as large as desired. For ventilation one can install special ventilators (small fans) with baffling fins to keep out the light and let in the air. Gypsum board panels are best for the walls, but leave the studs exposed on the inside of the darkroom for convenient hanging of safelights and other accessories. A plywood floor covered with asphalt tile should be put down on the top of the concrete floor. Then build a 30-inch high work surface around three of the walls, with a shelf midway between the floor and top of this work surface for storage of trays, drums, chemicals, bottles, and enlarging paper. If the new darkroom lacks a sink, a plastic tank (5-20 gallon capacity) with spigot for drawing off the water needed for chemical mixing is a satisfactory substitute.

In setting up the darkroom a "work flow" pattern should be kept in mind for most efficient utilization of space, and economy of movement. The enlarg*er is best set up in a corner*. It's a good idea to separate "wet" areas from "dry" areas, with negative viewing slide editing, print drying and trimming on the opposite side of the room from the wet processing area.

Proper placement of safelights is most important for trouble free printing. There should be a small safelight near the enlarger for ease in sorting through negatives, finding the proper dodging tools, setting the lens opening on your enlarging lens, cleaning negatives, etc. A second, larger safelight is needed over the developing tray, or stabilization printer; and a white light for print inspection over the fixing tray, preferably with a foot switch.

The most important item in a home darkroom is the enlarger. Those designed specifically for color work have dichroic (fade free) filters in special stepless, or stepped configurations. These may be used for color printing or black-and-white printing. Enlargers designed for black-and-white printing have filter drawers for the filters used with variable contrast black-and-white enlarging paper. These same drawers may also be used for holding filters for color printing.

Many of the newer models can be purchased with a color head, then a condenser head added at some future date for non-color printing. There are also auto-focus enlargers which are faster and more convenient to use, but they do cost more; and there are motor-driven enlargers that glide up or down at a touch of the finger. A quality lens for the enlarger is of crucial importance in making fine prints. It is foolish to spend hundreds of dollars for camera and lenses; then skimp on the price of the enlarging lens. A poor quality enlarging lens can ruin shots taken with the most expensive camera lens. Also, exposures in color printing are usually much longer than black-and-white, so the new, high speed enlarging lenses are designed for these longer exposures and they are usually more highly color corrected than older lenses.

The easel that holds your enlarging paper should be heavy enough so that it doesn't "skate" around the enlarger baseboard, and it should hold the paper flat at all four corners. There is a new generation of vacuum easels which hold the paper absolutely flat by means of suction, and produce borderless prints. These come in two types; one that works in conjunction with your vacuum cleaner, and the other has its own power supply built in.

A new assortment of electronic digital timers has been put on the market due to the popularity of color printing. These come in three configurations: those calibrated in tenths of a second, in full seconds, and in minutes. Some come with illuminated digital readouts that count down to zero; and some have a built-in audible signal that counts seconds for aid in dodging and burning in. These timers are all much more accurate than older models.

Because of the popularity of home color printing, many manufacturers now produce processing drums for color printing. These are used in much the same fashion as daylight film developing tanks. The exposed color printing paper is loaded into the tank in the dark, the tank is closed, and all subsequent operations are carried out in broad daylight. The necessary chemicals are poured into and out of the drum in proper sequence.

Another popular new method of printing black-and-white enlargements is with a stabilization processor. This looks like two rollers attached to a small housing, with space for two inverted plastic bottles. The exposed paper is fed through the rollers, and produces a damp-dry print in about 17 seconds.

Resin-coated printing papers have been gaining in popularity because surfaces require much less washing time (about 4 minutes against one to two hours for regular papers), and glossy surfaces are easily obtained without the necessity for ferrotyping. Also, these papers lie completely flat.

Most home darkrooms will also include a print trimmer. There are two types available. The newest has a rotary blade which is safer to use than the straight blade kind. The disadvantage is its inability to cut heavy mat board the way straight blade trimmers can.

A few final words about some important small accessories. A highly accurate thermometer is very important. The Weston thermometer has a clock face with easy to read numerals, and is accurate to half a degree. ■

Skulduggery and Ale
Shades of 18th century England, when innkeepers were bribed to drop the King's Shilling into the pewter tankards of unsuspecting able-bodied lads, making them fair game for His Majesty's service. Legend has it that if you "accepted" the King's Shilling — even though dropped into your ale unbeknownst to you — you became an immediate "volunteer." To assist the press gangs, as the recruiters were called, in recognizing those whose tankards contained "payment from the Crown," tavern hosts began using glass-bottom pewter tankards like the one offered here.

A Legend Up-dated
To commemorate this historic facet of the Revolutionary War period, The Times of London, the best known newspaper in the world, has authorized an issue of genuine pewter tankards with double glass bottoms, each containing a commemorative coin suspended between the layers. The coin, designed by noted artist Raphael Maklouf and struck especially for this occasion, features the portraits of George Washington and George III on the obverse; the reverse depicts the allegorical theme of independence and liberty.

Exclusively commissioned by
The Times of London
THE KING'S SHILLING TANKARD hand-made of English pewter with a commemorative coin—struck for the occasion—suspended between the two layers of its glass bottom

An Heirloom Worth Owning
The Times of London's Shilling Tankard is an authentic reproduction of an 18th Century English Pewter Tankard, handmade in Sheffield by the firm of Aquinas Locke, renowned for their fine pewter work for more than 200 years. Each Shilling Tankard measures over five inches high and holds 20 ounces of your favorite beverage . . . gives every drink a sense of the past.

Your Shilling Tankard can be obtained from The Times of London for the remarkably low price of $17.50. Tankards come carefully packaged in gift boxes that retell the story of the press gangs of King George III's England.

You may order by using the coupon below, enclosing your check. Or, you may charge your purchase to one of the major credit cards. Order several—these handsome tankards may be used or displayed, and make elegant gifts. You take no risk. If for any reason you are not completely satisfied with your purchase, The Times of London will refund your money.

The Rare Stamps of the World

Now Available in Silver Reproductions

Offered by The Olde York Mint

Actual Size

It has become increasingly difficult over the years for most collectors to obtain some of the rarest and most beautiful stamps of the world.

These stamps invariably end up in the hands of the wealthiest of collectors and are never or very rarely displayed for all to admire. For the most part, our only exposures to these beautiful rarities are through pictures in various publications.

It is with this thought in mind that we of The Olde York Mint have decided to offer to all who desire the opportunity to collect silver reproductions of the 48 rarest stamps known to exist in the world today.

These silver reproductions will be shipped at the rate of two per month for a period of 24 months. Please allow eight weeks delivery for the first shipment.

These reproductions will be available in Silver Proof, 24 kt. Gold on Silver and Antiqued Silver. And all will be serially numbered. Each bar will contain in excess of ¾ Troy ounce of fine silver.

To display your collection, we will send to you at no extra cost with your sixth shipment an album to hold all 48 ingots.

Also to make this collection more appealing, with each monthly shipment will be reference literature depicting actual stamps and other pertinent data.

All subscriptions must be postmarked no later than Oct. 8, 1976.

This is a one-time offer never again to be reproduced and is limited to one subscription per person.

SAMUEL A. TOWER

25 Years for U.N. St

In celebration of its 25th anniversary, the United Nations Postal Administration is issuing on Oct. 8 four commemorative stamps that depart in several ways from all other U.N. stamps to make the occasion of special import to collectors.

The issue embodies only two designs. Two stamps of like design but differing values in U.S. currency are being put out for use by the U.N. Headquarters in New York City. Two commemoratives, also of like design but of differing values of Swiss currency, are being issued for use by the U.N.'s European headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland.

In contrast to other U.N. stamps, these will be printed in horizontal sheets of 20 instead of the usual 50, which for the first time will provide an opportunity for collectors to obtain two marginal inscriptions on a block of 10 commemoratives.

In addition, Ole Hamann, Chief of the U.N. Postal Administration and an artist who has given decades of service to the world organization, has contributed a painting for the cacheted covers issued regularly to accompany new U.N. issues by the World Federation of United Nations Associations.

The two stamps issued for the New York headquarters are dominated by a magnifying glass that is enlarging a simulated sheet of stamps which bear the text "United Nations Postal Administration 1951-1976". In the right corner is the U.N. seal. Across the bottom is "United Nations." The stamps are in denominations of 13 and 31 cents and are in four colors, with black, yellow and brown predominant. They were designed by Henry Bencsath of the United States and measure 36mm horizontally by 26mm vertically.

A rainbow-colored post horn is the dominant design element of the two commemoratives issued for use in Geneva. Within the coil of the horn is the U.N. seal. Across the top of the five-color stamps is "Nations Unies" and the denomination. Across the bottom is "Administration Postale des Nations Unies 1951-1976." The stamps, with measurements identical to the New York issues, were designed by Hector Viola of Argentina. The denominations are 80 Swiss centimes and 1.10 Swiss francs.

Four marginal inscriptions appear on each sheet of 20 stamps, two at the top and two at the bottom. The sheets for the New York issues are framed in the margins with the U.N. wreath extending from the top marginal inscriptions to the bottom ones. The wreath appears only at the corners of the sheets for the Geneva issues, to allow for the printing of the Swiss values in the center margins.

Information about acquiring mint stamps, first-day covers and other U.N. material is available from the U.N. Postal Administration, Box 5900, Grand Central Station, New York, N.Y. 10017.

Ole Hamann, a Dane, who has himself designed more than 25 U.N. stamps and other material, as well as a number of WFUNA cachets, has for the 25th anniversary created for WFUNA a painting symbolizing a world of peace. He has encircled a turquoise globe and turquoise continents with an amber U.N. wreath, and set both globe and wreath against a background of brilliant sky and delicate clouds of blue, the U.N. color. The cacheted envelopes, carrying out the theme, are a light blue color.

The WFUNA cachets are 25 cents or five for $1. A cachet with the 13-cent stamp is 65 cents, with the 31-cent stamp 85 cents, with the Swiss issues $1.20 and $1.35. Combinations are possible, and there are handling charges.

Regular annual dating will resume on the three coins in 1977.

The three minor coins—Lincoln cent, Jefferson nickel and Roosevelt dime—were not changed for the Bicentennial. They retained their customary obverse and reverse designs and annual dating throughout 1975 and this year. They, of course, will continue unchanged and will carry the regular 1977 date next year.

The accompanying illustrations (above) show the current Bicentennial reverse designs along with the "old" eagle reverse designs that are to be "reborn" on the quarter, half dollar and dollar next year.

Inaugural Medals

To the Numismatics Editor:

I enjoyed your Aug. 8 news item about Dr. Darrell Crain's collection of official Presidential Inaugural medals, now on display (until Sept. 30) at the George Washington University Library in Washington. As you noted, it is probably a unique collection and well worth seeing.

Interestingly enough, in this Bicentennial and also Presidential-election year, there is on display in Washington a second collection of Presidential Inaugural exonumia, known as the Stone Collection. In addition to all of the official Inaugural medals, this collection also includes the "unofficial" Inaugural badges, buttons and medals from George Washington's first Inauguration through the first McKinley Inauguration (as you know, the custom of issuing official medals began with the second McKinley term in 1901).

The current display is the first public exhibition of the complete Stone collection of Presidential exonumia. For the information of your readers, it may be seen daily from 8:30 A.M. to 8:30 P.M., free of charge, in the exhibit area of "The American Adventure" at the corner of 13th and E Streets, N.W., in Washington, from now until the end of the year.

Nine-coin Proof Set shown actual size

All orders for this historic collection must be postmarked by September 30, 1976

For the first time in history, the Republic of Malta—Europe's newest republic—has entrusted an American mint with the striking of Proof Sets of its historic national coinage.

And—appropriately—the Republic of Malta now invites American collectors to acquire this superb set of coins.

Malta's proud history . . . reflected in its fascinating coinage

Each of these Proof Sets will include nine coins—individually struck to the highest standards of quality by The Franklin Mint, the world's largest private mint. And each coin will bear a distinctive design that reflects the 4,500-year history and proud heritage of this courageous nation.

Thus, a bee and honeycomb is shown on the 3-mils coin, symbolizing the fact that honey was used as currency in ancient Malta —and that many people believe the name "Malta" was derived from the Greek word for honey.

The floral altar depicted on the 5-cent coin dates back over 4,000 years. It stood in The Temple of Hagar Qim, one of Malta's most famous prehistoric monuments.

Malta's historic struggle for independence is reflected in the helmeted head of Penthesilea, Queen of the Amazons, which appears on the 2-cent coin. Mythology has it that Penthesilea fought alongside the Trojans in their war with Greece.

The famed Maltese Cross portrayed on the 2-mils coin was originally worn as an heraldic emblem by the legendary Knights of Malta.

The Great Siege Monument, shown on the 50-cent coin, commemorates the defeat of a Turkish invasion force by vastly outnumbered Maltese defenders in 1565.

The reign of The Knights of Malta during the 18th century is reflected in the portrayal of The Grand Master's Barge—a magnificent ceremonial vessel—on the 10-cent coin.

An earthen lamp stand, typical of those used by most Maltese families before the discovery of electricity, appears on the 5-mils coin.

The George Cross, Great Britain's grateful tribute to the extraordinary bravery of the Maltese people during World War II, is depicted on the 1-cent coin.

And finally, Malta's historic declaration of a Republic in 1974 is reflected in the nation's exquisite new Emblem, which is portrayed on the 25-cent coin.

Ordering deadline: September 30, 1976

Proof Sets of these 1976 coins of the Republic of Malta will be issued in strictly limited edition, with an official ordering deadline of September 30, 1976. The total number of such Proof Sets to be minted will be forever limited to the exact number ordered by that date. Moreover, there is a limit of two Proof Sets per order. And each set will be issued in a deluxe presentation case and accompanied by a Certificate of Authenticity.

To acquire the first Proof Sets of Maltese coinage ever minted in the United States, directly from the mint and at the original issue price, please use the order form at right.

The Franklin Mint is the only private mint in the United States currently authorized by governments of other sovereign nations to mint their monetary coins.

Showy Perennials To Plant This Month

By CAROL E. LEIGHTON

Although many beginning gardeners may not realize it, autumn is a great planting season. Any perennials set out now will have a headstart to develop a strong root system. Top growth should be trimmed back to a height of an inch or two so all energies will go toward root formation.

Don't forget to water at the time of planting, and whenever there is no measurable rain for a week. And winter mulch, after the ground freezes to protect new plantings.

Of the edging plants, mid-border and taller specimens, three of my choices will bloom in spring; the rest in the summer months. I have tried to include species mostly in the whites and pastel shades I enjoy, finding their colors easier to combine and their light tones visible longer into the early evening hours.

Candytuft, Virginia bluebells and leopardsbane will bloom first next spring. Candytuft is a wonderful foot-high plant that is covered with frosty white flowers at tulip time. It offers a neat band of green to edge the border for the rest of the season. Candytuft likes light, well-drained soil and should be severely pruned back after flowering to prevent spreading and dying out in the middle.

Leopardsbane is a delightful early-blooming member of the daisy clan. It needs rich soil with a high humus content to preserve summer moisture. Tops die back in July so a large planting of them will leave problem areas needing to be camouflaged by later bloomers.

Virginia bluebells share this tendency to disappear in midsummer, so they must be used judiciously in a small border. But I cannot omit them, for their early blue bells and pink buds offer an irrestible beginning. They are planted one inch deep in cool, rich soil, in a shady corner of the garden.

Two other perennials thrive in shade and similar soil conditions, yet unlike bluebells they offer superb foliage to be enjoyed all summer. Astilbe blossoms are feathery plumes in shades from white to pink and red, and boast excellent finely cut foliage. They are June and July bloomers. Hostas, also known as plantain lilies or funkia, bloom at a variety of times. From pointed oval leaves tall scapes of white or lavender flowers are borne.

Along with candytuft and hosta, Fraises des Bois are an excellent choice for the front of the border. Their always neat foliage is supplemented by the charming small white strawberry blossoms beginning in June and continuing all summer, and of course by those delicious French strawberries. They are planted a foot apart and can be divided after a year for a quick increase in stock. I find them trouble-free and prolific, growing sturdily in sun and ordinary soil.

Of the mid-border perennials, columbines bloom first, in June. My favorite is Aquilegia chrysantha, a clear yellow variety which has no special soil preference and shade tolerance.

The common name of Achillea filipendulina is fernleaf yarrow. I think the best cultivar is Coronation Gold. It is three feet tall and flowers are light mustard yellow, flat clusters carried above handsome gray-green ferny leaves. They will bloom three months, June through August, if faded blossoms are removed. Dry, poor soil is preferred, and full sun.

Shasta daisies, which need no description, come in both single and double varieties. Like achillea they also have long flowering periods, but they prefer rich, moist ground.

In the rear of the border where taller perennials are placed, will come peonies, one of the aristocrats of the garden. All summer long their splendid foliage can offer a background; they are very nearly trouble-free with the possible exception of a rare, easily controlled fungus. Their white, pink or red June flowers are universally loved. Peonies are planted with their red budding eye one inch below the soil level, in very rich earth.

Daylilies can be chosen that bloom as early as peonies, but most flower in July and August. They do not like rich soil or too much lime. Best of all I love the tall yellow Hyperion, with its sweet fragrance. (One Daylily to be avoided in a garden is the Hemerocallis fulva, the common, rampant roadside variety which can take over a whole border in only a few years.) Daylily leaves are bountiful and arching and can be used to cover other nearby perennials that disappear in midsummer, such as leopardsbane.

Summer phlox is another fine, familiar standby. The Symons-Jeune strain developed in Great Britain several years ago and now available in this country is one of the most magnificent perennials available to the gardener.

The tall sturdy stems rarely require staking and they come in the most vivid, clear shade of red, pink and purple. (There are no white varieties of Symons-Jeune, but some excellent choices of regular Phlox are White Admiral or World Peace.) Rich soil and full sun produce large heads of bloom.

A few cultural hints should be heeded with phlox: thin individual plants to three or four stems for best bloom; water from below with a soil soaker to avoid mildew forming on the leaves; plant two feet apart for good air circulation; and deadhead regularly to avoid ugly magenta seedlings from crowding out choice varieties. ■

Some Common Probl

In an effort to catch up on the backlog of unanswered questions, most of the Home Improvement column this week is again being devoted to Questions and Answers. Many of the letters published here ask questions similar to those posed by other readers whose actual letters may not appear here but who will, nevertheless, find their answers printed below. Readers sending in questions about home repair problems should address them to: Home Improvement Department, The New York Times, Times Square, New York, N.Y. 10036. Only those questions of general interest will be answered here.

Q: During the hot humid summer months there is a musty odor on our first floor, which is located over a half-basement and crawl space area. We thought the odor came from old carpeting, but this has been replaced and the odor still persists. We have tried making sure there is ventilation in the crawl space. The basement is damp and we wonder if this is the source of our problem, and if so what can we do about it?—H.G., East Brunswick, N.J.

A: If you remember that musty odors only develop when dampness is present, then it would seem apparent that at least part of your problem is caused by the dampness in the basement. I would recommend trying to cure the dampness problem in the basement and also installing a dehumidifier if it is closed most of the time. Also, make certain the floor in the crawl space is covered with concrete or a layer of polyethylene sheeting, and then increase the number of louvered vents so that you have at least one square foot of opening for every 300 square feet of floor area in the crawl space.

Q: I live in an apartment house that has a steam heating pipe in the kitchen which runs up through my floor and continues on through the ceiling above. The seal where it passes through the floor has crumbled away and annoying cooking smells seep up from the tenant below. Is there any way to seal this opening? The pipe is about 2½ inches in diameter and the sleeve around it about 4 inches.—G.F., New York City.

A: As a rule there is a metal collar around these pipes to seal off most of the opening—and I assume this is what you mean when you describe a sleeve. This metal collar should leave very little space around the inside where it surrounds the pipe. You cannot put any solid material in this opening since the pipe expands and contracts lengthwise. What you can do is slide the collar up, then wedge fiberglass insulation into the floor opening around the pipe. Then push the collar down snug against the floor. This should seal off most air (and odors), yet still allow the pipe to move lengthwise when it expands.

Q: The porcelain enameled fixtures in my bathroom have worn spots where the black metal shows through. I have sprayed with "porcelain" epoxy paint which is sold for this purpose, but the paint in the soap dish flakes off. Is there any waterproof paint that will do the job better? Could it be that I didn't get all the soap out of the dish?—I.J.S., Chicago, Ill.

A: The answer to both questions is yes. The only true epoxy paints are those that come in two parts (separate containers) which you mix together just before use. These are much stronger than the so-called one-part epoxy sprays (actually paint that is modified with epoxy). However, very thorough cleaning of the surface is a must with epoxy—and in soap dishes this is especially important.

Q: The crawl space under our house has an average of only 18 inches between the dirt and the floor joists above. I have some vents at each end, but still get a stale smell in the basement area and in the rooms above. I know the dirt has to be sealed and so bought a large roll of polyethylene, but it is nearly impossible to get into the crawl space because of a lack of access, and the low overhead clearance. Is there anything that can be sprayed over the dirt to seal it, or do you have any other suggestion?—P.A.B., White Plains, N.Y.

A: I have never heard of any spray you could use. The dirt in the floor space should be covered—even if it means cutting one or two access panels or trap doors in the floors above, or in the foundation wall. If you can get in through one of the vents or if you can enlarge the vent sufficiently, you might try using long pa rope through from eac tie the rope to the polye can pull it across. A Connecticut Enthusiast Tells Why it is So Important to Select the RIGHT Potting Soil for Your House Plants

Twenty years ago, when I first became interested in growing plants in my home, I used to refer to the soil as "dirt". I thought that if I could approximate the natural environment of a tropical plant by giving it warmth, water, light and dirt, then it would thrive.

I couldn't have been more mistaken, particularly as far as the "dirt" was concerned, for many years later I was to discover that the "dirt" (or the "soil", as I now respectfully term it) performs functions other than just supplying nutrients and moisture to be taken up by the roots.

The specific situation that led me to this conclusion was that I could not grow impatiens in my home during the winter months in the very same soil that they flourished so well in outdoors during the summer. Surely, I reasoned, a plant that flowers profusely in the shade outdoors, would easily adapt to growing in the shade of the indoors, with similar temperature and the very same soil. But I was wrong.

It wasn't until I realized that conditions in the home are far more hostile to plants than we all think and that being incarcerated in pots and containers might well make a difference, that I turned to the soil as the probable culprit. Our homes are also a far cry from the controlled environment of a greenhouse that is designed to duplicate, as nearly as possible, the great outdoors of a warm, constantly humid climate that most tropical plants thrive in. In our homes there's very little humidity during the cold winter months — the very time we all want to see our house plants flourishing at their colorful best — and the effects of misting generally only last about half an hour at the most.

Many tropical plants have the ability to adapt to less sunlight than they would normally require but they are real sticklers when it comes to soil and moisture requirements, showing little inclination to adapt to too much or too little water, inadequate humidity and excessive or insufficient nutrition. Excessive water retained by the soil will starve roots of vital oxygen, often causing the plant to die. Soil that allows water to drain through it rather quickly very soon dries out, becomes "caked", and the plant suffers from lack of moisture available to the roots and lack of moisture normally given off into the air — vital humidity!

As an example of this, imagine a hot tropical sun beating down on the leaves of a plant that has not received any rain for several days. Much of the vital moisture and humidity wafting around the leaves preventing them from being "dried out" is coming from a soil that is to a great extent composed of decayed vegetation, which retains sufficient moisture and at the same time allows excess water to pass through so that the roots are not sitting in a constant pool of water.

To retain the humidity given off by the soil to give seeds and cuttings started indoors a fighting chance, many people cover them with plastic bags. But covering all our plants this way is not practical — and certainly unsightly.

The structure of the soil is therefore of vital importance for growing healthy plants indoors. Outdoors the situation is much less critical because there's so much more soil surrounding the plant to retain moisture and waft up humidity around the stems, leaves and flowers, that it is so finicky about. The right soil enables plants to gain a real foothold in a dry, hostile environment by actually creating a miniature "greenhouse-like" atmosphere around the plant!

After several years of mixing my own soils and experimenting with commercially packaged soils, I came upon the NEW ERA brand of potting soils and mixes that proved to be the solution to my problems. Impatiens now bloom year round and all other plants are remarkably healthy as well.

I found out that New Era potting soils and mixes are deliberately and precisely blended with all this knowledge and all these considerations in mind. They have been developed over the years to be consistently superior soils specifically for plants grown in containers in homes, by people who have been growing plants for well over fifty years. (I should have discovered New Era twenty years ago and saved myself a lot of heartaches!)

NEW ERA soils actually contain a large amount of pasteurized, decayed vegetation that is so vital for moisture retention and for providing humidity — let alone a wealth of organic nutrients. They are also balanced as far as the pH factor (acidity) is concerned, and are fortified with the right amount of nutrients with the full knowledge that house plants are going to be growing in the confines of a pot or container and in the unnatural environment of a home — not in a greenhouse, for there's a big difference!

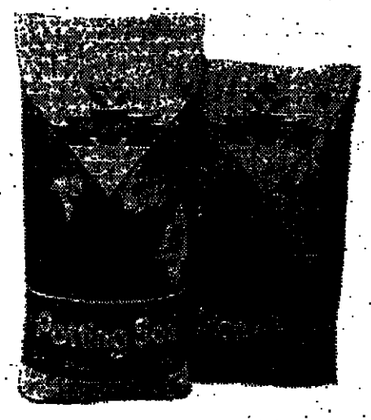
There's also a whole line of excellent plant foods, carefully formulated to work together with the New Era Soils.

You'll find you can buy a whole range of New Era plant foods, potting soils and plant mixes, including special blends for African violets, cacti, philodendrons, terrariums and so on — together with special starting mixes for seeds and cuttings — at most supermarkets and variety stores, and at a whole host of garden supply centers and stores throughout the Northeast.

One last thought: when you remember that the soil structure and its food content is the one thing you can control completely and precisely in your home, and that the New Era people have produced a packaged line of products that so closely perform the functions of the soil found in the natural habitat of tropical plants, the chances of failure are minimal and that you will be rewarded with lush luxuriant growth from plants reaching their full potential.

If your house plants aren't growing as well as they should, look to the soil — it's more important than you might think.

ALAN SLATTER



Alan Slatter lives in Southern Connecticut and has some 200 plants growing in his home, many of them six and seven feet in height. A double pink flowering impatiens is no less than 3½ feet tall and 4 feet across! Each plant has to be carefully placed because of less than desirable sunlight conditions. The living room is a veritable jungle with masses of color from flowering impatiens, azaleas, hibiscus, canna and African violets. Sturdy impatiens plants even bloom in a cold Northern exposure that receives no direct sunlight at all during the winter months!

City Gardeners Can Grow Everything—Almost

By CARLA WALLACH

If gardening in general tries a man's soul, making things grow on the 20th floor turns him into a masochist. This breeds timidity in the terrace gardener's approach to what he can tackle safely. How unfortunate! For the city gardener can grow just about anything his country friend does, only he must be more selective and take some extra precautions.

Take hardy bulbs, for instance. What can better lift one's spirits after months of gray winter skies than spring bulbs in glorious bloom? Tulips, daffodils and hyacinths as well as a number of smaller bulbs can be grown on terraces. Their requirements are simple: a soil depth of 14 inches (minimum) that drains well, plenty of water, a bit of bonemeal at planting time and a sprinkling of any good general fertilizer in the spring.

Bulbs can be planted during this month and next in raised masonry beds, wooden boxes or out-sized clay containers. Planters must also have holes at the bottom for proper drainage. Bulbs growing in containers require more frequent watering than do those in the deeper and larger raised beds. Any sunny location is good for bulbs, but a southern exposure obviously means more—sometimes daily—watering.

On terraces, I like to plant bulbs a bit deeper than normally for added protection against severe cold weather. Plant tulips, daffodils and hyacinths eight inches deep (that means the hole is eight inches deep) and six inches apart. Sprinkle a bit of bonemeal at the bottom of each hole first and place the bulb, pointed end up, firmly on the soil.

When interplanting, a smaller bulb such as glory of the snow can be planted right on top of a larger bulb such as a daffodil. The stem of the larger bulb simply winds its way around the bulb above it and saves precious planting space.

Water deeply after planting bulbs and keep the soil on the relatively moist side until the first deep frosts when the soil freezes. Start watering again in early spring after danger of frost is over.

A deep mulch several inches thick is a must for all terrace plants, especially bulbs and perennials which suffer considerably from soil heaving during winter warm spells. Pine bark mulch, cocoa bean hulls, if they can be found, leaves and salt hay are all good. In addition to the soil mulch, individual boxes and clay containers should be wrapped in burlap, or circle newspaper around them and tie securely as added winter protection.

Short-stemmed tulips are best for high-rise gardens because they are wind-resistant. I like the species tulips: Kaufmanniana, Fosteriana and Gregii. Cottage tulips with their extra-strong stems are also suitable. Kaufmannia tulips, the first to bloom in early March, are low-growing with flowers resembling waterlilies. Stresa is a striking deep yellow with a wide bright red flame on the outer petals. Shakespeare has a vivid orange-red base with the rest a blend of salmon shades. Heart's Delight is a deep red edged with rosy-white. Gaiety has enormous white flowers with pinkish-red outer petals.

Next to bloom are the Fosteriana tulips, made justly famous by the award-winning Red Emperor. Team it with its white counterpart, Purissima. Last to flower of the species are the Gregii tulips which bear large flowers and have beautifully mottled leaves as well. They vary in height from eight-inch Red Riding Hood to 18-inch Margaret Herbst.

The May flowering Cottage tulips are taller with egg-shaped flowers, satin-smooth petals and rich colors. There are so many varieties.

Have daffodils come a long way! There are varieties with white, all shades of yellow, pink, single, double, yellow trumpets, bi-color or reversed bi-color, large or small cupped in solid colors or vividly contrasting. Many have delightful fragrance as a bonus. They boggle the mind, but none is more spectacular than that classic old-timer, King Alfred, whose golden-yellow flowers often measure four inches across. For its equal in white, there's Mount Hood.

I admit I'm partial to fragrant daffodils. A whiff of perfume in the air adds an extra dimension to the garden, most especially on a terrace where one is close enough to the flowers to enjoy their perfume. The group called Poetaz Narcissi has outstanding fragrant varieties.

Speaking of fragrance, can anything beat hyacinths? They tolerate semi-shade. After a heavy rain, the large flower heads may keel over. For extra support, the flowers can be staked with tiny bamboo stakes, no higher than the stem or oversized wooden labels. Of the several bulb sizes available for hyacinths, the bedding size is best because the plants can withstand rainy and windy weather better.

No spring garden is complete without some of the minor bulbs, minor in size perhaps but most certainly not in charm. They last for many years, multiply with abandon and are equally effective used alone, in combination with tulips or daffodils, popping out of a groundcover such as ivy or at the base of deciduous trees. You know you've seen the last of winter's bite when you spot your very first snowdrop (Galanthus) or crocus. Crocuses come in white, yellow, blue, purple and many combined colors, so choose a harmonizing shade when teaming them with other bulbs.

A popular minor bulb is the grape-hyacinth (Muscari). Interplant the blue variety with yellow or white tulips, or use as an edging for yellow daffodils. The white Muscari is striking teamed with blue or purple hyacinths or with any of the multi-colored bulbs. There's also glory-of-the-snow (Chionodoxa) with star-shaped dainty flowers, excellent mixed with tulips. The variety Gigantea is light blue with a white center, while Luciliae Rosea is a soft rose.

To have hardy bulbs bloom year after year, the foliage must be allowed to mature, yellow and fall off by itself. To hide this stage of nature's unsightly housekeeping, annuals can be planted in front of the bulbs.

To be successful with this long-lived bulb planting, a large rectangular bed or planter with sufficient space in width is important to make room for both bulbs and annuals. Most of the bulbs will carry on for several years with the proper planting space but hyacinths are best replaced every year or two.

When there is no space for this kind of planting, then the hardy bulbs must be dug up and discarded after planting to make room for the annuals. New bulbs will have to be purchased in the fall. This is a modest outlay for the rewards in return.

While there are many, many varieties of hardy bulbs, those listed are tried-and-true varieties, easily available at garden centers or from reputable mail-order houses. Those who offer bulbs through catalogues include: P. de Jager & Sons, South Hamilton, Mass. 01982; John Scheepers, 63 Wall Street, New York, N.Y. 10005 and Van Bourgondien Brothers, Babylon, N. Y. 11702. ■ tastic May-blooming parrot tulips (even though its stems are limber) is a blend of rose, salmon and creamy pink. Happily it is still available. Newer varieties have sturdier, upright stems, but Fantasy is great for bouquets. Other favorites are Black Parrot, a nearly black red; Blue Parrot, a rich mauve with green markings; fragrant Orange Favorite, almost red with green markings; and White Parrot. These huge heavy flowers with deeply cut, and curled or twisted segments are most effectively displayed against contrasting backgrounds. They develop slowly and are intriguing until the petals drop.

A New Look At Bulbs

Fringed tulips are sometimes listed as parrots but they are quite different.

The fine lacinations of these goblet-shaped flowers are very delicate—like a narrow lace edging. In the variety Blue Heron, the violet petals pale to almost white at the fringed edge, a two-toned effect. And Swan Wings' pure white set off by black anthers is choice.

Variations among daffodils are so numerous that I can hit only an occasional high spot. Multiflowered daffodils, for one, range all the way from the beloved (and still available) old single jonquil with three to five fragrant golden flowers per stem to late-blooming Silver Chimes with as many as eight exquisite white blossoms on each strong stem. Other sweet-scented multiflowered and rather late-blooming varieties are white-and-cream Cheerfulness, Yellow Cheerfulness, Geranium white with orange cups, and Suzy, yellow with small, nearly red cups.

Interesting new fully double varieties with large, long-lasting flowers are Double Delight, with a pointed white perianth around a fluffy center of intermingled white and canary-yellow petals; Coral Strand, with several rows of white petals, interspersed and centered with ruffled coral petals; and a showy new one called Enterprise, with yellow and bright orange petals. (It was bred from that famous early-blooming daffodil standby, Fortune.)

Bicolor daffodils, white with red or yellow crowns—or yellow with red or orange crowns — are familiar, but Sumptuous, with a milk-white perianth and yellow bell-shaped crown that takes on buff tones as it ages, is new and showy in the garden. Reverse bicolors with lemon-colored perianths, and crowns that change to white, inside and at their bases, as the flowers mature, are still unusual. Spellbinder is a big trumpet in this pattern. Binkie, a medium-sized flower but a heavy bloomer, is another reverse bicolor that is nearly at the top of my list of favorite daffodils. So is Pipit, a jonquil hybrid with three flowers per stem.

Wood hyacinths (Scilla campanulata) which come into bloom after the Dutch hyacinths have faded, are refreshingly different in effect. They are taller, with longer stems, and the florets are not quite so closely set. Gronp them in a semi-sunny border or plant them informally under trees or shrubs. White Queen, and Blue Excelsior are showy colors. The lavender-pink of Rose Queen is a very delicate shade. All three are available.

Everyone who sees the large clump of summer snowflakes (Leucojum aestivum) blooming in my early May garden exclaims in delight at the mass of 18-inch stems hung with many green-tipped white bells. They are much *showier than those of the spring snow*flake (L. vernum) and revel in a rich moist soil in sun. ■ he club seven.

he proverbial inability of the leopard to change its spots is shared by the bridge expert, an equally formidable carnivore in his chosen jungle. The expetimes stare at the spots he has been provided by f the deal and wish that a uddenly change into a six iraculous metamorphosis s aid; and if the wretched es to defeat the contract, he has to be content with a sad story to recount to anyone who will listen.

In the diagramed deal from the Regional Mixed Pair Championship in McAfee, N. J., last month, the spot cards appear to be insignificant. But the club spots turned out to be deceptive. Most of the partnerships arrived at a club slam, and the question was whether 13 tricks could be made.

One world-famous New York expert received the lead of the diamond queen and thought he would have no trouble making all the tricks. His plan was to take five top tricks in the side suits and cross-ruff the remainder. He therefore won the diamond ace, cashed two spade winners and ruffed a diamond. When he cashed his top hearts and led a heart he seemed in control and would have been if West had discarded.

But West ruffed with the six, forcing the queen from dummy. A diamond was ruffed and another heart was led. Again West ruffed, and South overruffed with the club ace. The position was now this:

WEST
♠ J10
◇ J8

EAST
♡ Q

SOUTH

♡ J
♣ KJ10

Now the spots proved fatal to the expert in the South seat since the lead was unfortunately in the dummy. Whether he led a spade or a diamond, East could discard the heart queen and be in a position to overruff dummy's club five with the eight. If dummy had begun with ace-queen-six and West with seven-five, there would have been an automatic high cross-ruff at the end.

The winners of the event were Henry and Kitty Bethe of New York who reached seven clubs as shown in the diagram. South's bidding indicated six hearts and five clubs and his bid of five spades indicated a willingness to cooperate in a slam venture although he had no idea what final contract North had in mind.

If Bethe had received the diamond lead, there would have been ways to make 13 tricks, but he would probably not have found them. He would probably have adopted the cross-ruff plan, which fails, as we have seen.

But the opening lead was the club seven, superficially damaging since it immediately kills the cross-ruff plan. However, the diamond ace remained *as an entry to dummy, and this permit*ted South to try one plan and fall back on another.

He won the first trick with the club jack and cashed two high hearts, throwing diamonds from the dummy. He then ruffed a heart, and when West threw a diamond the heart-establishment play was doomed. So Bethe fell back on his reserve plan and developed the spade suit. He led the spade ace and ruffed a low spade.

Dummy was entered with a trump lead and another low spade was ruffed. As the trumps had divided conveniently South could now use his own last trump to extract East's eight, throwing the last diamond from dummy.

Dummy won the last four tricks with the diamond ace and three spade winners. And like any leopard who has fed well, Bethe was able to relax without thinking about his spots. ■

Michael Rohde: Another Bobby Fischer?

FOR Michael Rohde, the Manhatan Chess Club international tournament proved to be a marvelous opportunity. By scoring 9 points in 15 rounds, the 16-year-old New Jersey player not only tied for fifth place, but also achieved his first international master norm.

Rohde thus became the youngest American since Bobby Fischer to take the first step in qualifying for that rank. He now needs one more such result to be graded an international master.

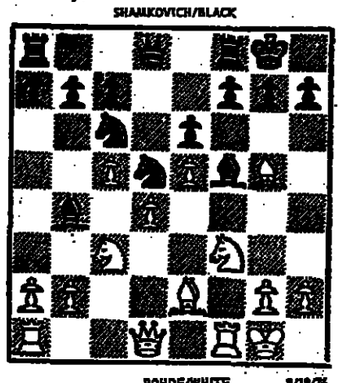
At 14 Rohde had reached a United States Chess Federation rating of 2,300, a distinction that no one but Bobby Fischer had merited in recent years. When the new ratings, including his Manhattan Chess Club International Tournament performance, come out, it is estimated that he will stand about 2,400 or 100 points from the minimum grandmaster level.

Rohde, on the march, trampled the Israeli grandmaster Leonid Shamkovich, who tied for first prize in the event. A sharply played opening that Shamkovich failed to solve gave Rohde a winning end game that he went on to win.

Nowadays most players shy away from the double-edged four pawns attack with 5 P-B4, but it is just right for a young firebrand. After Black chooses 8 . . . N-B3, it is better to continue with 9 . . . B-K2 instead of 9 . . . B-QN5, since the follow-up thrust . . . P-QB4 is no longer available.

Perhaps Shamkovich thought to confuse his young opponent, but if so, Rohde quickly proved him wrong. The black knight maneuvers, 10 . . . N-R4, 11 . . . N-Q4 and 12 . . . N-QB3 wasted time and Shamkovich found himself facing problems after 14 B-KN5.

SHAMKOVICH/BLACK



ROHDE/WHITE 9/19/76

Position after 14 B-KN5

He might have had a solution, after 14 . . . P-B3; 15 PxP, PxP; 16 NxN, by trying 16 . . . PxB; 17 NxB, NxN; 18 Q-Q2, N-B3; 19 B-N5, P-KR3; 20 BxN, PxB. Instead, his 16 . . . QxN? got him into trouble because 17 B-R6, KR-Q1; 18 B-K3 (not 18 P-QR3?, BxBP), did not allow 18 . . . P-K4; 19 NxP!

Rohde could have snagged the black KB by 19 P-QR3 without fearing 19 . . . QK5; 20 Q-B1, N-Q4, which is stopped cold by 21 K-B2, but his 19 R-B1 was also strong. Had Shamkovich run for a pawn by 19 . . . QxRP, his kingside would have deteriorated against 20 B-QB4, QxP; 21 N-R4.

Shamkovich's struggles to right his difficult position foundered against Rohde's 24 Q-N3, guaranteeing White the gain of a decisive pawn. Afterward, it would have been correct to adopt passive defense with 29 . . . B-N2 rather than look for more trouble with 29 . . . N-K6, leading to the loss of another pawn.

With 35 BxP, Rohde went three pawns ahead, and even though his wrap-up technique was a bit rocky, Shamkovich could not get close to pulling out the game. After 72 P-R6, Shamkovich could neither cope with the passed pawns nor rescue his knight; he therefore resigned.

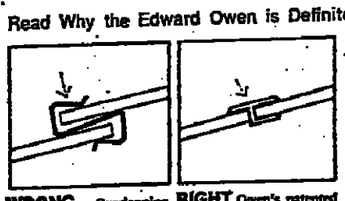
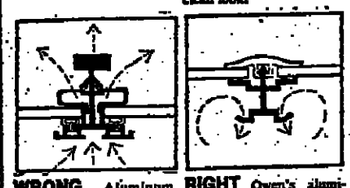
The Edward Owen Safety Greenhouse™

Read Why the Edward Owen is Definitely America's Best Greenhouse Value.



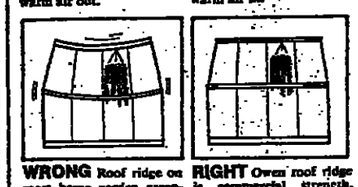
WRONG Overlapping glass panes with steel clips are out-of-date; create dirt traps to harbor disease.

RIGHT Owen's patented glazing system butts glass panes together with butting strips for a sleek, clean look.



WRONG Aluminum glazing bars that project outside the glass act as heat conductors drawing warm air out.

RIGHT Owen's aluminum is inside the greenhouse, capped by a plastic insulating strip, keeping warm air in.

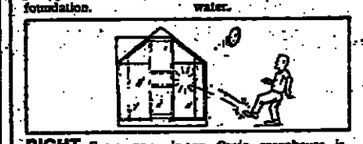


WRONG Roof ridge on most home garden greenhouses is too weak, sags under weight of glass and hanging baskets.

RIGHT Owen roof ridge is commercial strength, will support any number of hanging baskets without sagging.

RIGHT Owen supplies an aluminum base wall free so you can install your greenhouse without a foundation.

RIGHT Owen includes gutters and downspouts free so organic gardeners can collect valuable rainwater.



RIGHT Every pane in an Owen greenhouse is safety glass—5-7 times stronger than double-strength window glass.

Buying a greenhouse needn't be confusing. In fact you may be one of the thousands of future greenhouse owners who have held back because you cannot decide what kind to buy. The choices seem endless—wood, steel or aluminum frame; plastic or glass panes; rectangular, square and geodesic shapes; lean-to or free-standing; plus a host of different brand names. Even swimming pool companies are trying to sell greenhouses to unknowledgeable home gardeners.

All Safety Glass Panes

Now, Edward Owen takes the confusion out of buying a greenhouse by offering units that combine all the important features. Experience among greenhouse owners proves that the greatest satisfaction is from an aluminum frame greenhouse with glass panes. Aluminum is sturdy and maintenance-free, while glass has good looks and is crystal clear for top quality growing results. The only problem with glass has been the risk of breakage, but now Edward Owen virtually eliminates that risk by offering all-safety glass to create a truly carefree greenhouse.

Heat Saving

But that's not all. Edward Owen has engineered their greenhouses with a number of unique features described opposite. You can assemble an Owen greenhouse yourself over a weekend without a foundation because we supply a base wall free (you cannot build a sturdy greenhouse without a foundation unless you have a base wall). The glazing system that avoids overlap panes, the internal aluminum glazing bars that save on heating bills, and the commercial strength ridge are all unique features you cannot find elsewhere at equivalent cost.

The New Adventures of Tom Jones

By ROBERT LINDSEY

LOS ANGELES—When the corporate chieftains who make their living in the high-stakes world of international arms sales gathered in England two weeks ago to show off their newest flying machines, there was a familiar figure.

Smiling, shaking hands with old friends, comfortable in the presence of the generals, admirals, sheiks and ministers that he knew from dozens of countries, Thomas V. Jones, chairman of the Northrop Corporation, was on easy ground at the Farnborough Air Show.

Yet perhaps no chief executive of a major American corporation has ever been as discredited in the public eye as Mr. Jones, a result of the wave of scandals that engulfed him and Northrop starting with the Watergate investigation. Other executives caught up in the scandals—Bob R. Dorsey of Gulf Oil, Daniel Haughton and A. Carl Kotchian of Lockheed, Harry Heltzer of Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing—are gone from the scene.

But Mr. Jones, who was connected to more types of alleged misdeeds than any of these men, is still in charge at Northrop. He was at Farnborough not in disgrace, but as the most powerful man at the company he has headed since 1959. And there were indications that Mr. Jones was on the brink of perhaps his most successful coup yet in the lucrative world arms market.

Eighteen months ago, Northrop lost what was then called "the arms deal of the century." General Dynamics Corporation was chosen over Northrop to build 650 lightweight fighters for the United States Air Force. Pentagon officials predicted General Dynamics would sell hundreds, perhaps thousands more of its new single-engine jet, the F-16, to America's foreign allies.

But at Farnborough, almost as if he had won—not lost—the race, Mr. Jones was offering international arms buyers a promising new fighter in direct competition with the F-16. And many industry experts were saying that perhaps Northrop, which is in partnership with McDonnell-Douglas Corporation on the craft, will end up selling more of its planes abroad than will General Dynamics. That Northrop plane is a land-based version of the F-18, which is a sea-based version of the F-17 which was an original loser to the F-16 in the great fighter contract dogfight—and it is a tribute to the never-say-quit spirit of the arms merchants.

Northrop's chief executive was tarred by business scandals but he hung on. Now his company is taking off.

If Northrop can sell that plane, it could mean hundreds of millions of dollars over the next 20 years for a company whose reins Mr. Jones has desperately, and successfully, clung to during the past four years.

This saga of Tom Jones presents a curious chapter in the history of American business.

His troubles started with the Watergate revelations that he made $150,000 in unlawful contributions to the 1972 re-election campaign of Richard M. Nixon. He pleaded guilty to a felony charge, and was fined $5,000, but escaped jail.

Then came a flood of revelations about Northrop's overseas activities, a Securities and Exchange Commission investigation indicating the company maintained a $30 million fund for questionable overseas payments, and admissions of $450,000 in bribes to Saudi Arabian generals.

There were questions raised about bribes elsewhere, including unproved charges involving Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands, and about Northrop's employment of a former Congressional staff member to lobby successfully for Federal funding of its F-5 fighter.

There were other, lesser scandals, disclosures that Northrop billed the Government for millions of dollars it spent lobbying on its own behalf, and revelations that it had wined and dined scores of Pentagon generals, admirals and influential civilians at a Maryland hunting lodge.

Why is Mr. Jones still running Northrop?

Company directors, who chastised him and briefly removed him as chairman last year before restoring this title in February, say it is because he has cleaned up the company and ended whatever bribery was going on, and that many of the allegations against him were exaggerated.

Others say that Mr. Jones's survival is essentially one of performance outweighing any wrong-doing, and the feeling with the Northrop board that he is doing a good job.

"I think Northrop has had the best record in the aerospace industry, and I think this is due to Mr. Jones," said Alan Benasuli, an aerospace stock analyst for Drexel Burnham & Company.

"I don't think they've ever had any overruns. They've got the best record on costs. Their airplanes have good performance and they've invested money to develop aircraft with their own funds so they could lessen dependence on military orders in this country and expand export sales. Mr. Jones had done an outstanding job," he said.

"Northrop is probably one of the best run companies in the industry, and to a large part this is a result of Mr. Jones's doing," said Wolfgang H. Demisch, an aerospace analyst for Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Company.

"In the early 1960's, after he took over, Northrop was a company that didn't have any place to go: the Snark missile was over; the F-89 (fighter) wasn't

But the auto industry is difficult to hunt in because "there is generally less job movement. It's a very, very close community industry and Macy's knows what Gimbels is doing all the time in Detroit. It is a close knit fraternity," Mr. Roche said.

"It is much more difficult to recruit out of G.M. than the others. The real story behind this is that Mr. McLernon was not on the market—he was definitely not looking," Mr. Roche said. "He was not available and it took three approaches to develop any interest whatsoever. It was only when he heard of the tremendous challenge and opportunity and future that VW had planned that he would even listen to us."

There's no doubt that Mr. McLernon doesn't see himself as managing just another plant with a few thousand workers (as head of Chevrolet manufacturing at G.M. he commanded 75,000 workers at 27 plants). He sees the job as the building of a new auto empire, eventually encompassing plants from coast to coast, making and selling hundreds of thousands of cars a year.

This was the lure that brought him out of G.M.

"I am leaving a great organization that is in great shape," Mr. McLernon said. "I liked it and I am going to miss it. You are never happy about leaving a place like G.M. I talked to the president (E.M. Estes) and the chairman (Thomas A. Murphy) and they wished me well and said it was a great opportunity, but told me I could always have a job if I ever needed one. That's the way I left. It is not often you can leave a company that way. And it is not easy. When you spend 27 years with The Corporation, it is your life. I was in no way considering changing jobs. But they contacted me."

"Don't look on this as one little plant. This is a great opportunity for the entire country. This will create a lot of jobs."

Then there was the money. It is believed Mr. McLernon will receive about $2 million in pay, bonus and other compensation in a five year contract, including "up front" money, hundreds of thousands of dollars, to compensate for the already-earned future bonuses he gives up at G.M. for joining a competitor. This actually may not be any more than he would receive from General Motors over those years, but he may well be the highest paid official of Volkswagen, earning even more than Toni Schmücker, the managing director of the German auto maker and the man who ordered the job search.

It was July when Heidrick first contacted Mr. McLernon, but then it was also considering others for the job. "We reviewed 80 or 90 backgrounds and contacted personally 30 of them," Mr. Roche said.

Material on thousands of individuals in dozens of industries is filed in his firm's computers. But Mr. Roche said "we use computers only at the beginning of a search—not to make a selection. It is merely a tool to help us keep track of what we have learned over the years."

"We met with at least 15 or 18 people personally," he said. "And it finally boiled down to three people, Mr.

Within six months to a year, if Kresge's plans and experience mean anything, most of these stores will be breaking even or earning a profit—the fastest sprint to the tape in retailing.

"We try to make the stores pay off in the first year," says Robert E. Dewar, Kresge's chairman. "Many times they do and this helps to keep our financing down."

"We expect a 25 percent return on investment by the end of the third year of the store," he adds, "mainly because of its increasing efficiency. After that, we assume that near-capacity efficiency has been achieved and the store should grow mainly from increasing sales." The chain will open about 260 stores this fiscal year which ends next Jan. 26, they will help push sales to $8 billion this year from fiscal 1976's $6.8 billion. The company's goal is $12 billion in sales in another three years.

Kresge's sales this year are running neck and neck with J.C. Penney Company, which has been the No. 2 retailer. At the end of six months of the fiscal year, July 28, Kresge was $100 million ahead of Penney's in sales, and its profits of $101 million were 70 percent better than Penney's.

At this moment, only Sears, Roebuck & Company is outselling Kresge but Kresge officials only smile vaguely when asked about tomorrow's target.

"We're a very focused company," says Mr. Dewar, the 54-year-old soft-spoken chief executive, "and part of that focus is our own growth plan. Our sales have grown consistently at 20 percent each year in the last decade, about half from our new stores. We haven't as a company, in any sense, suggested that catching up with Penney's or even Sears is a goal."

"We don't want to excite ourselves so much with size," says Walter H. Jennings, the stocky, 48-year-old vice chairman, "that we lose sight of our managed growth and bottom line goals."

The third man in Kresge's leadership troika is Ervin E. Wardlow, the 55-year-old president, and the only one with extensive merchandising experience. All three readily admit that they have been the caretakers of a grand plan initiated 15 years ago by Harry B. Cunningham, then chairman and now honorary chairman, to turn Kresge from just another large variety

Commodity Speculators Anticipate a Dip in the Pool

By H. J. MAIDENBERG

Commodity speculators, the oldest breed of gamblers in the marketplace, now have another game to play: the commodity pool. This idea is based on the ordinary mutual fund that is offered investors in the securities market.

As of mid-August, 533 commodity pools were registered with the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, and 456 of them were in operation.

Most of the pools are small—235 have a net worth of less than $50,000—and most are poorly managed. They generally charge participants up to 25 percent of any profit plus management fees of as much as 6 percent a year of the amount invested or one-half of 1 percent a month.

But all this may change swiftly if the C.F.T.C. gives the go-ahead to proposals by the big Wall Street brokerage houses to offer commodity pool participation to their clients. Approval by the Federal agency is considered likely by early 1977.

"Actually, any big Wall Street house could offer commodity pools today," George D. F. Lamborn, executive vice president and director of commodities at Shearson Hayden Stone Inc., observed the other day.

"But under the present rules," Mr. Lamborn declared, "any big, solvent and well-managed house would be out of business overnight if it offered membership in commodity pools. It's the old aggregation factor."

Under the so-called aggregation factor, imposed years ago by the Government to prevent the cornering of any commodity market, every speculator can only hold only so many futures contracts in a given commodity.

In the case of wheat, corn or soybeans, for example, the limit was raised this month to 3 million bushels from 2 million bushels. On the so-called "foreign markets" in New York, where coffee, sugar, cocoa and various metals are traded, the limits are set by the particular exchange, not by the 17-month-old Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

What all this means to operators of commodity pools today is that the diversification their clients are seeking is hobbled. As Mr. Lamborn's aide, Nelson Chang, explained:

"The great attraction and potential profits inherent in pools is that members can participate in a number of markets. Further, they are spared margin calls and forced sell-outs by brokers.

"Not only do houses such as Shearson Hayden Stone have the international expertise to manage pools but also we are in a financial position to mix in commodity options, straight futures and spot or cash goods as well as take advantage of arbitrage situations."

Basically these wide-ranging activities of commodity brokerage houses would be sharply curbed by the present aggregation factors because, in effect, the speculative limits on each pool are the same as for one individual trader.

Legitimate trade interests (concerns involved in the handling of any actual commodity) may buy or sell futures contracts without limit if such trading is for the purpose of hedging their goods against adverse price fluctuations.

But speculators in commodity futures are something else again. They can risk their money in several ways. Most are either long or short on futures contracts, which are promises to buy or sell a fixed amount of a raw material by a specified date.

Speculators in futures usually seal their promise with a token cash payment, or margin, that may range from 5 to 15 percent of the value of the goods involved at the time the deal is made.

Because a brokerage house must square its accounts with the exchange upon which the trade was made for its client at the end of every business day, these margins are closely watched. Should the value of the contract decline, the client is asked to put up more cash.

The frequent margin calls in a typically volatile futures market tend to raise the odds sharply against the average speculator, particularly if he has already made a profit. The reason is that speculators tend to quickly convert paper profits into more futures contracts, thus building a thinly margined pyramid of holdings.

The fear of a margin call at any time of day has encouraged speculators to try commodity options. These are, in effect, a warrant or right to buy a futures contract at a set price during a certain period.

The chief advantage of commodity options is the fact that the speculator knows exactly how much his maximum loss would be.

But there are drawbacks to commodity options. At present they may not be offered by licensed brokerage houses on commodities traded in this country. So an investor has to ask his broker to buy them through London offices on commodities traded in London.

Given this bizarre situation, hordes of fly-by-night options brokers have been able to gull the public out of tens of millions of dollars by selling them options on the London cocoa, sugar, coffee, copper, silver and gold markets. These dishonest options dealers, who tend to vanish or end up in jail, thrive because legitimate brokerage houses also offer London options.

However, the problem of shady options dealers is being met by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission. It is putting the finishing touches on new rules to allow United States commodity exchanges to handle options under supervised conditions.

Then there are the commodity pools. Actually, pools have been around a long time, usually on an informal basis among friends and occasionally as part of a scheme to try to corner a commodity.

In a normal pool, people buy "shares" to join. Their money is then used by the pool to trade in futures contracts or options.

The manager or head of each pool must register with the C.F.T.C. if there are more than 10 members and the group's net worth is more than $50,000.

Last month there were 315 registered pool operators who ran the 533 licensed pools. Of these pools, two had no net worth, 235 had less than $50,000, and only 26 had a net worth of more than $250,000.

"You can't run a commodity pool with so little money," Shearson Hayden Stone's Mr. Lamborn declared.

As far as the Federal Commodity Futures Trading Commission is concerned, raising or ending the aggregation factors is easier said than done.

Thomas A. Russo, director of the division of trading and markets of the C.F.T.C. in Washington, feels that delays in the rules on both options and pools are necessary and will help the public. As one of the leading experts in the field, Mr. Russo explained:

"Let's discuss aggregation. The commodity markets are volatile and often rather narrow. Thus, the question of possible attempts to corner a market is always a prime concern. Certainly the rigging of prices is at all times

"With this in mind then, what constitutes an illegal act? When does a group of people acting in concert in the market constitute a questionable act? These are still open legal questions that must be resolved."

Above all, Mr. Russo emphasized, the Government wants to nail down safeguards for speculators in commodity options and pools.

"We should have our disclosure requirements worked out in a month or so," he said. "This would cover solicitation materials to prospective members of pools, basic operating details, the extent of diversification of assets, the amount of borrowed funds being employed and the objectives of the pool."

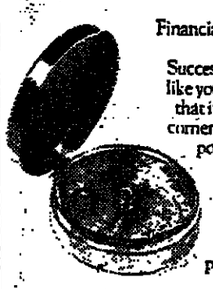
OUR 125th ANNIVERSARY YEAR — A public listed company

You know where you're going. Has anyone told your money?



Financial planning.

Successful people, like yourself, know that it's the cornerstone of position, means, comfort. The key to your continuing prosperity.

And chances are you've got your gameplan for the future pretty well mapped out.

It may include investments for a reliable source of income. Conservative estate growth. Aggressive asset development. Generous retirement income.

Most likely, your investment goals are a special mix of several elements. A highly personal combination geared to your future. And yours alone.

There's just one thing:

Are you letting your money in on the plan? Does your portfolio reflect a coordinated program to achieve your objectives, or is it a potpourri of miscellaneous holdings amassed over the years?

Do you or your current financial advisor weigh your specific future goals when considering an investment? Or are you merely a number, or a file?

One way to find out for sure is by sitting down with your Investment Management Advisor at Sanford C. Bernstein & Co., Inc. —the organization that pioneered "money management for the individual investor" nearly a decade ago.

He's more than just an investment expert. He's someone who will provide the one-to-one attention a substantial investor like yourself really deserves. He'll carefully analyze your present financial status. Take into consideration your personal lifestyle. And help you crystallize your financial needs at various stages down the road.

Based on this review, your personal portfolio manager will design a sensible investment strategy to get you there. It may include stocks, bonds, options, commercial paper, U.S. Treasury Bills or other alternatives. The sole criterion will be whether the investment mode is consistent with your financial objectives.

The bottom line is this: As a Bernstein "discretionary account," your portfolio enjoys two extraordinary benefits. First, all investment decisions made on your behalf are targeted to your specific financial strategy . . . deliberately designed to meet your unique goals.

And second, those decisions are reached by a full-time professional. A highly experienced individual whose finger is on the pulse of current trends; whose personal responsibility it is to make sure your portfolio is "in tune" with today's financial marketplace and continually working to meet your objectives. And because he is also one of the owners of Sanford C. Bernstein & Co., Inc; you're always assured of diligent, top-level attention.

These distinct advantages are usually reserved for large institutional investors. But Bernstein believes you, the prominent private investor, deserve no less.

Advertising Council's booklet has sharp comments from some ists. Yale University's James who was a member of the Coun- Economic Advisers under Presi- ennedy, said, "Many will be de- because the smooth Madison e language gives the impression ing how the economy works it ever doing so." campaign has run into mixed ns at the broadcasting networks e of objections raised by the s Business Commission. NBC has to air the Advertising Council's ercials, but CBS and ABC have refused, apparently feeling that the campaign might be controversial enough to require the networks to give equal time to opposing views.

The Peoples Business Commission, formed in 1971 to resist commercialization of the Bicentennial, now is promoting what it calls the "second American revolution." Jeremy Rifkin, a 31-year-old former antiwar activist who heads the commission, says it is conducting "an anticapitalist campaign two or three steps removed from New Deal economics." It promotes such ideas as public ownership of banks, worker management of companies and consumer cooperatives.

The commission, with a $300,000 annual budget, says its money comes from some 22,000 members, mainly students and people in their 20's "out of community colleges and trade schools." It sends printed material to 5,000 schools and other organizations. Among other projects, the commission has produced five paperback books. A sixth, due to be published in January, is titled "Economic Democracy: An Alternative to the Present Economic System."

The Public Media Center is a nonprofit ad agency that grew out of the antiwar movement but is unrelated to the Peoples Business Commission. The center, with offices in San Francisco and Washington, works for liberal groups including the United Farm Workers, Consumer Federation of America and Energy Action Committee.

Unlike the commission, the Public Media Center does not mind if networks carry the Advertising Council's messages. In fact, the center wants stations to air more public service ads than they do. (The center, of course, wants its share of such air time.)

Roger Hickey, 30, the Public Media Center's Washington director, complains that the Advertising Council presents a "pro-corporate point of view." The center's own announcements, to be offered starting this week to all stations carrying the Ad Council's spots, will promote a booklet that Mr. Hickey says will discuss "the influence of monopoly power on prices and consumer choices."

Mr. St. Leger of the Advertising Council said it was not coordinating the efforts of individual companies to sell themselves, although "we may be running parallel to some corporate campaigns."

Several years ago Mobil Oil decided to "participate in the marketplace of ideas," said Herbert Schmertz, the company's vice president of public affairs. "Too often corporations complain about the results but don't participate in the dialogue."

Mobil has mounted one of the most ambitious corporate ad campaigns. Of the $13 million it spends annually, $5 million pays for what Mr. Schmertz calls "issue advertising" in newspapers. On various issues, Mobil presents its views, ranging from a need for "balance between the private sector and government" to a lack of need for breaking up big oil companies.

The company spends $4 million on commercial television, with institutional-type ads. It gives $3 million in public TV grants, for which Mobil gets credit before and after each program. Mobil spends the remaining $1 million on a variety of projects.

The Exxon Corporation and other oil companies are also buying newspaper ads opposing a breakup of oil companies. Exxon contributed $200,000 toward restoring the Titanic Memorial Lighthouse at New York's South Street Seaport. The Gulf Oil Corporation last year made its first national public TV grant, of $3.7 million.

Xerox, long identified with quality programming on public and commercial TV, complains that too many companies are getting into the act. "More companies have come into the field, and it's more and more difficult for us to find quality productions," said Walter Olesen, Xerox advertising manager.

The United States Steel Company has run magazine ads on the theme of "What Makes America Work." The Bethlehem Steel Corporation presents its view of tax reforms needed to stimulate capital investment and jobs. The Allied Chemical Corporation advertises that corporate cultural contributions are made possible by corporate profits.

Issue ads run by Mobil and other oil companies have encountered heavy fire from the Energy Action Committee, which is urging Congress to break up oil companies. James F. Flug, committee director, has presented (and Mobil has rejected) demands that Mobil buy newspaper space for breakup proponents. The committee has asked the Federal Communications Commission to order TV networks to give air time to breakup proponents who want to answer Texaco's commercials opposing breakup.

Corporate television grants are stirring the A.F.L.-C.I.O.'s ire. Al Zack, the labor federation's public relations director, says it is "highly suspicious that backdoor Treasury money" is financing public TV in the form of grants that companies deduct in computing their Federal income taxes.

It is unclear whether the media blitz is making any real difference in public and political attitudes toward corporations and the free enterprise system.

The Advertising Council's Mr. St. Leger said, "Most businessmen think this campaign is a good idea." Asked whether Mobil's campaign is paying off, Mr. Schmertz answered: "I have no idea. Probably there's a wider recognition of Mobil." At the A.F.L.-C.I.O., Mr. Zack asserted: "Corporations are wasting their dough. The public can think."

As the media blitz grows, so apparently will the controversy over corporations and capitalism.

Louis M. Kohlmeier is a Washington columnist and author.

IF YOU THINK THE SYSTEM IS WORKING, ASK SOMEONE WHO ISN'T.

Even if you've got a job, chances are you know someone who's out of work. Today, more than 7 million Americans are looking for jobs, and can't find them.

These people know first-hand that our economy is not working the way it should be.

They know the terrible personal costs of unemployment—the fear, the insecurity, the bitter frustration of wanting to work and yet not being able to provide for their families.

But they're not the only ones who pay for the failure of our economic system to provide enough productive jobs. All of us pay the costs of welfare and crime and broken families. And we all lose the productive talents of millions of people who could be performing socially useful work.

High levels of unemployment seem to have become a part of business as usual, even in good times. The giant corporations that control our economy don't seem to mind having lots of people competing for a few jobs. And some of our elected leaders actually tell us that the only way to keep the lid on inflation in our economy is to keep several million people unemployed.

SPEAK UP, AMERICA!

More and more Americans are getting tired of paying the costs of business as usual. We understand that we're not going to have an economy that puts people to work until we make some basic changes in the way our economy works.

We're producing TV and radio ads to talk back to the corporate advertising we've been getting lately. And we've created educational materials—like our free booklet, A Working Economy for Americans—for use in schools, union locals, church and community groups. Start a campaign in your community. And write us so that we can send you the tools.

We want to get Americans talking about economic change. It's the first step toward a democratic economy, one that works for all of us.

A specialized investment technique for the $100,000 investor.

"Special Situation" investing is a technique that has long been used by the professional investor. It is an approach that every substantial investor should carefully consider. When handled by knowledgeable professionals who never lose sight of the importance of basic values, it could materially reduce the dangers of market risk and speculation.

David J. Greene and Co., is recognized within the financial community as one of the few firms doing concentrated work in the special situation area, and providing this service to the sophisticated investor.

Our investment philosophy is simple: we uncover special situations where, in our opinion, the risk is limited and where the opportunity for substantial long term gains exist.

In our view, "special situations" take three forms: Situations where fundamental corporate changes are a probability, or significant earnings turnarounds are possible, or where an undervalued asset position exists. Thus, special situation investing depends more on the basic values and potential we see in a security at a given point in time than the action of the market in general.

The key to David J. Greene and Co.'s acknowledged expertise in the "special situation" area is the quality and extent of our research activities. We originate our own investment ideas and have an extensive internal research capability. All of our research activities are concentrated on identifying and following special situations and our Investment Advisory clients get the direct benefit of this intensive investigation through the resulting recommendations.

In addition, we take special pride in the quality of our service to clients. To maintain these standards each account manager services only a limited number of clients and all investment decisions are made by the firm's investment committee.

At David J. Greene and Co., a client is never part of a pooled fund, always an individual whose fiscal well-being is of vital concern to a partner.

If you are an investor with a portfolio of $100,000 or more, you should know about this sophisticated investment technique. Without obligation, we would be pleased to meet with you to review our service and fee structure and explain the special situation approach in detail.

Telephone our Investment Advisory Department at (212) 344-5180 for a personal meeting, or write for our booklet which further explains the David J. Greene "Special Situation" approach.

Pertamina's New Boss Picks Up The Pieces

Gen. Piet Haryono of Pertamina must not only raise money by getting Indonesia's oil to market but also contend with the results of past mismanagement.

head of Pertamina disclosed y: "Pertamina, as it was, had nters of earnings. But now there e earnings center, and that must thing outside oil must be a cost- hicle if it is to stay and not s center."

Haryono said that other activi- to be a drain on slender re- d "one way or another will be sing." He explained: "If, for ex- tamina tries to produce rice it- will be too costly. The Depart- griculture can run it better. As nonoil activity is cost-saving, ight; if not, it can be done by panies."

e has put the Pertamina house in order. General Haryono said, "we have to increase oil exploration and production, and secondly we have to guarantee a normal distribution system for Indonesia."

Despite the long-term goal of encouraging production, however, in the last six months, Pertamina has squeezed new agreements out of the protesting international oil companies that will give Indonesia more than $600 million a year in additional oil revenues. A large part of this will come from the Caltex Petroleum Corporation (a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Company of California and Texaco Inc.). Caltex produces 850,000 of Indonesia's 1.5 million barrels daily production.

Indonesia demanded an extra dollar a barrel on the oil that Caltex pumps and got it but only after issuing what was widely described as an ultimatum. As a concession, Caltex was given back 80 cents of that dollar on its sales to the East Coast of the United States, where transport costs are higher. Indonesia's share of the $12.80 price of a barrel of oil rose to $11, and Caltex's estimated profit was trimmed to $1.37 a barrel. Having dealt with Caltex, the Indonesians then turned to the newer companies engaged in production-sharing contracts.

The new arrangement that Pertamina offered was distinctly less attractive than in the past. The Indonesians said the international companies would be divided into two groups—those with more than seven years' oil reserves and those with less. Those with more than seven years' reserves would be allowed to recover their capital costs by depreciating over 14 years according to the double declining-balance method, while those with less than seven years' reserves would be allowed to depreciate over seven years. All the oil money would be split 85/15, with Indonesia taking the lion's share. No capital costs would be currently recoverable from 1976 and over a five-year to 10-year period on a straight-line system for expenses incurred before 1976.

In General Haryono, Indonesia at last has an oil sultan who is known to be careful with money.

The international oil companies were angry. There were predictions that they would milk the existing wells dry, then quit, leaving Pertamina with oilfields that it lacked the expertise to tap. One oilman complained that, under Pertamina's deal, Indonesia would not lose if the oil companies did not find oil but Indonesia—not the companies—would be the winner if they struck a bonanza.

Nevertheless last month most of the oil companies signed. General Haryono said that the big seven (including Total, Japex, Iapco, Petromer, Trend and Asamera) had signed and that the smaller ones were about to. However, oilmen point out that exploration has been curtailed, with only three new rigs now exploring off Indonesia. In addition, service companies are pulling out.

General Haryono shrugged off a suggestion that the companies were going slow in Indonesia because of the tough negotiations. "All over the world," he said, "oil companies are cutting back on exploration."

He conceded that Indonesia might have to offer special inducements to persuade the international companies to keep up a high level of exploration.

"I am fully aware of the fact that Indonesia's development comes from oil," he said. "Having that in mind, we must produce a climate that would allow investment in oil to continue and one that must be attractive to both parties—Indonesia and the oil companies.

"I am going to start discussions with the oil companies in early October, and we shall see whether there is the possibility of more leniency in 1977. If it is still within the framework of the Government proposals, we can talk about it." He said it was possible that special incentives might be given to get exploration started.

General Haryono and Pertamina are being tugged in conflicting directions. Indonesia urgently needs money from oil immediately. In spite of "the biggest corporate rescue operation in the world," mounted to save both Pertamina and the nation from bankruptcy, all that has been performed is a bridging operation.

Even with oil earnings of nearly $6 billion this year—actually $3.4 billion of net oil earnings because Indonesia has to import heavy-duty oil from the Middle East—and annual official aid of more than $1 billion, the country's finances are desperately tight. By 1979, the World Bank has calculated, Indonesia will be paying 19 percent of its total export earnings in debt repayments, a dangerously high percentage.

Yet the penalties of squeezing the international oil companies too hard are also obvious. By the mid-1980's, experts predict, the existing oil wells will start to dry up as Indonesia's oilfields tend to shrink. But by the mid-1980's Indonesia will still have to pay some of the bills from the Pertamina debacle, and in the mid-1980's the development struggle is expected to still be uppermost.

Indonesia is a poor country—not poor in the Bangladesh sense but poor enough to have a per capita income of only about $150 a year and per capita oil consumption of about six-tenths of a barrel a year (compared with 30 barrels a year in the United States). The dream of going from rags to riches remains a dream. Indonesia has great natural riches, but its population may almost double by the turn of the century.

Oil, Indonesia's lifeblood, supplied more than 70 percent of export earnings last year and nearly 60 percent of the Government's tax revenues.

General Hayrono cannot grapple fully with the future until he has cleared up the mess he inherited at Pertamina. Its debts of $10.6 billion have been reduced to just over $6 billion. Of that, 40 percent reflects a series of disastrous long-term charters of oil tankers, which General Haryono is trying to renogotiate. At the mention of oil tankers his brow furrowed even deeper.

Pertamina apparently is refusing to make the monthly payments on some of the deals because they were not approved by the full supervisory board as Pertamina's regulations required. Tankers operated by the Burmah Oil Company, with which Pertamina has just entered into a 20-year agreement to carry liquified natural gas to Japan, are believed to be affected by the withholding of payments.

General Haryono refused to discuss this situation beyond saying, "If I am correct, there are indications of fraud in some of the cases."

The Holt Investment Advisory presents . . .

Special Strategy for the Bear Market Ahead with Specific Stock and Bond Recommendations

Confounding bulls and bears alike, the market has trended neither upward nor downward for more than half a year. History suggests, however, that such a horizontal pattern can't persist very long. At some point, the averages will break out of their narrow ranges. Chances are, the subsequent market move will be quite sharp.

That major trend, we believe, will be pointing downward. Billions of dollars of stocks have obviously been bought in anticipation of an "inevitable" election-year boom. But as recent retail figures suggest, the business recovery may actually be faltering. And with the election only weeks away, time is rapidly running out for politicians to create the much-expected boom.

Bear Market Strategy

But a bear market is nothing to fear, as long as you don't "freeze" and ride it all the way down. Indeed, to many innovative investors, sharp market movements—down as well as up—represent unusual capital-building opportunities.

Moreover, even in a bear market, some selected stock groups and non-equity issues will probably push ahead. Very often, in fact, the more the general market declines, the more these contra-cyclical issues appreciate.

In a special flow-of-funds report titled "The Unwinding", The Holt Investment Advisory explains why we believe the coming decline will be supersteep. And it presents a comprehensive Investment Strategy and specific securities to help open-minded investors protect and build capital in such a bear market.

We invite you to read this eye-opening flow-of-funds study. You may just agree that our analysis makes good sense. And if we are right, the Investment Strategy we offer can very well make or save a lot of money for you. The about 65,000 different half the items a depart- ries). Any store manager of these in a ratio he r his store. "But if he merchandise quota," Mr. s with a wry smile, "we something else."
The item that sells the cadre of store managers tor in the success. When ogram began some 800 Kresge executives and es were used to man unt stores and to main- tain a constant pool of executive trainees—a force 4,200 strong today.

"We've got a manual on almost everything we do except merchandising knowledge," says Robert E. Brewer, vice president and treasurer. "But we know that by the time our store managers, who ultimately order 95 percent of all merchandise, arrive at a reasonable level of expertise they make few mistakes. Even with manuals, retailing has to be an on-the-job training process but mistakes can be minimized with a normal 5½ years experience each manager gets before he assumes his job."

The stores themselves may be important, too. A typical K mart may have 75,000 square feet, all on one floor, generally standing by itself in a high traffic suburban location, and not part of somebody else's shopping center. There's plenty of parking and the inside is bright and clean.

"We have a standard floor plan for a store," said Mr. Brewer. "The cosmetic department is always in the same spot. We want the K marts all to look alike—but of course new ideas are gradually worked into the plan by our store planning department."

"The store modules are inviolate. It is all a cut-and-dried process," Mr. Teninga, the vice chairman, adds.

There's something else about a K mart, a down-home feeling, an informality, a come-as-you-are atmosphere. Nobody dresses up to go to a K mart. Indeed, women in curlers, hefty men in shorts, and crying children are as much a part of the typical K mart as the standard floor plan. The K mart is primarily a seller of national brand merchandise—Kodak, Polaroid, Zenith and RCA are Kresge suppliers—and only about 25 percent of the sales are in its own or private brands.

Kresge's success in discounting is even more impressive when matched against its competition. Chains such as Arlan's Department Stores, Giant Stores and S. Klein went out of business. Interstate Stores, N. H. Fishman, Miller-Wohl Stores, National Bellas Hess, Belscot Retailers, Daylin Inc. and Mammoth Mart have entered bankruptcy status or have recently come out of it.

Even giant Sears Roebuck seems to be having its problems. Its $14 billion a year sales rate, while about double Kresge's, is climbing at a much slower rate. Sears recently created a chairman's office consisting of its four top executives, a move apparently aimed at correcting merchandising weaknesses.

Kresge has had some advantages. Most general merchandisers pay out 40 percent of their profits in dividends. Kresge's dividends have averaged less than 20 percent of profits, and more than 40 percent of its earnings have been ploughed back into the business. A dozen years ago the Kresge family's foundation was the dominant stockholder, and not likely to complain if the profits were poured into the K mart program.

The quick return from new stores also makes Kresge's cash rich. "No long term debt is anticipated," says Mr. Teninga, "because our cash flow will be adequate to fund our expansion program for the balance of the decade."

The company moved into a new, starkly modern building in Troy, a rich Detroit suburb, four years ago, but the chain's top executives like to call themselves "frugal" or "tight fisted" when it comes to spending money.

One executive says the company is the largest in the country without its own airplane. "If a corporate jet costs $1.2 million it could be equivalent to cutting earnings by one cent a share," he noted.

Mr. Wardlow, the president, a tough-sounding former store manager who began as a part-time Kresge stockboy while in high school in his hometown of Fillmere, Mo., audits executives' telephone bills.

"You would be amazed how many people in our building here had two telephones when they only needed one. How can you talk on two phones at once? We saved some money by changing that," he says with glee.

Kresge officials admit there is new competition coming from regional discounters who have a good feeling for their own local communities. But the chain doesn't seem concerned about them, or about any danger from its almost complete reliance on its K mart stores.

While most of the K marts are large—71,000 to 93,000 square feet is common in the major stores—a smaller store program of 40,000 square-foot stores was launched two years ago. These can be opened in towns with a population as low as 6,000, Mr. Dewar said, and 140 will be operating by the end of this year.

The Kresge managers seem more interested in continuing their successful pattern than changing.

"We listen constructively," says Mr. Dewar, the chairman, "We became successful because we were hard-working, had little fat and it's my determination that we stay that way," says Mr. Teninga. "We're like a family and we talk like members of a family. I don't see the interplay, the jealousies that crop up elsewhere. Maybe it's because we all have a tremendous thrill in the magnitude of our growth."

Kresge also is particularly strong around Detroit, its home, and the present strike at the Ford Motor Company won't help business if it drags out. But Ervin E. Wardlow, the president, says, "We hope to increase our business during Christmas and the final quarter by 17 to 18 percent."

The company was founded in 1899 when Sebastian S. Kresge, a traveling salesman, opened the first Kresge variety store in Detroit. The sign he posted over that tiny store read: "Nothing Over 10 Cents." By the time Mr. Kresge died on Oct. 18, 1966, at 99, the company had grown to 915 stores with sales of over $1 billion a year.

In the board room of "Executive Suite," CBS-TV's new Monday night offering. Network has invested over $750,000 in show about a conglomerate. If the program gains close to a 35 audience share and a 20 rating, it may survive.

From the beginning "Executive Suite" had been seen by everyone concerned as a nighttime soap opera in the "Mary Hartman" mold. That is to say, it not only would emphasize matters of particularly female interest but also would do so with a large, interacting cast of characters, unchanging from week to week, rather than with a couple of leads dealing with continually changing supporting players.

However, scripts were being written and casting was under way while the struggle over the reality quotient of the show was taking place in CBS's own executive suite.

When the issue was finally resolved in favor of what might be called the female principle, Mr. Rubin and Mr. Felton, who had quit the project at one point and then been rehired, found themselves heading, at least for the first few shows, in a direction they didn't really want to go.

"A bombing of the factory of the corporation's chemical division by the daughter of the president of the corporation to protest a possibly carcinogenic insecticide is the main element," Mr. Rubin said.

"For one thing, we thought it was dated," he went on. "It was five years ago, not now. Our basic concept was to bring it up to date. The only trouble was that, if we had gone back and started from the beginning, we couldn't have gotten it on this season. So we decided to go with what we had and swing the series around as we went along."

Not that "Executive Suite" is all that realistic about the world of business in its first couple of episodes, which were screened last week at CBS headquarters in New York.

As in other series, no one ever mentions money—at least not as salary or profits.

The characters' personal relationships, needless to say, are as tangled as a plate of pasta. The son of the corporation's president is trying to renew a romance with the daughter of a plant superintendent, but she has meanwhile become the mistress of the vice president for whom she works.

The public relations man, a cool young cat who wants to put the corporation in touch with the younger generation, turns out not to be married to the voluptuous woman he is introducing as his wife.

She is being blackmailed, it appears, by a man for whom she made the mistake of agreeing to appear in an X-rated movie five years before. The wife of the crusty executive vice president, a man whose business philosophy is somewhat to the right of Scrooge's, finds out about this indiscretion and plans to use it to destroy both the P.R. man and the socially responsible president of the corporation. And so on.

If "Executive Suite" can't hold close to a 35 audience share and a 20 rating, it's unlikely to be around long, even though CBS has invested more than $750,000 in its development.

It's the old story of product acceptance. And that, after all, is what business is all about.

VW's Search for Mr. Right

McLernon and two others. The others were not from G.M. but were from among the other three U.S. (auto) companies."

In that winnowing process, some people were dropped from consideration because they lacked experience in one field or another. "Some of them were cut without even being contacted," he said. "Of the 30 we contacted, many were interested. Some of them we met in Detroit, some in vacation spots or as they were passing through New York, or in Europe.

"Most don't want their own companies to know of the contacts. But one man went right to his boss and said he had been contacted."

Heidrick makes no secret about approaching an individual it thinks might be qualified. "We rarely send letters. When we want a person we go right at them and say: 'Hey, would you be interested in considering such and such a type of job?' We don't tell them the company until we are sure they have the qualifications and are really interested."

"We don't go around hiding behind potted palms in airport lobbies."

Heidrick suggested three people to Mr. Schmücker, the VW head, and his executive committee in Germany but did not rank them or in any way or list any favorite. "They were all qualified," Mr. Roche said. "We always try and give the client a choice."

"One of the key things for this job was someone with very heavy experience beginning a new venture—someone with start-up experience, as opposed to maintenance experience. Lordstown was in his favor."

Mr. McLernon had a large hand in turning Chevrolet's Lordstown, Ohio, plant into the world's fastest auto assembly line, building Vega cars at the rate of 100 an hour. However, it may have been just this experience six years ago as well as subsequent events, that tipped Mr. McLernon's decision to join VW. When he took over Chevrolet manufacturing, four car assembly plants were part of Chevrolet, including Lordstown. But in the early 1970's they were transferred to the General Motors assembly division, and out of Mr. McLernon's control, reducing his power and potential for promotion within G.M.

His hiring by Volkswagen could create one little future problem of who is boss. Mr. McLernon heads a manufacturing subsidiary of German Volkswagen. Distinct from his operation is VW's already-existing sales organization here, Volkswagen of America. This unit is headed by an old VW hand, Stuart Perkins. He built VW sales to 500,000 cars a year in America, and then saw his business halved under an onslaught of high quality and lower priced import cars from Japan. There have apparently been hints that eventually the two organizations will be combined under the new boy from G.M.

Mr. Perkins, who has been meeting with Mr. McLernon in Detroit, says "this combination of our European approaches and his background can lead to tremendous blending of the best of both sides of the Atlantic. Dealers have already called me and are very high on this. His reputation is fantastic." But the slim, English-born VW executive also says: "There aren't any plans to put the two firms together, but we will be working together and I think we will make a good team."

A top priority for the new head Volkswagen manufacturing in America is the job of building a staff. "At my old Brand X we had a staff in Detroit and plants spread out all over. Right now I have to set up a staff and a location."

"I have zero employees now," he said. The next spots to be filled will be a dozen or so executives who will work directly under him—financial and purchasing bosses, for example.

Mr. Roche of Heidrick & Struggles won't say how much his firm will collect for the wooing of Mr. McLernon. But those in the headhunting industry say the normal retainer an employer pays is equal to 30 percent of the executive's first year pay, which could be a considerable sum considering the "up front" money the ex-G.M. man will receive. And there will be more to earn by by helping him fill the spots on his staff.

"He felt he had no choice," said a Northrop middle-manager who has been close to the situation. "He's a pragmatist who believes you have to change your tactics according to each situation, and that's what he was doing."

Mr. Benasuli, the stock analyst, said: "He's a very pragmatic man who I think was reacting to the competition. He's a tremendous marketing genius, and I think he saw what Lockheed was doing overseas, and decided he had to do the same thing to sell his product."

Mr. Jones, a Stanford-educated engineer who was reared in a classic California setting—his family owned a citrus grove in Pomona south of here—has declined to discuss, for the record, his views about his recent ordeal. Since last spring, aides to Mr. Jones have repeatedly agreed to—and then put off—requests from The New York Times to talk to the executive on the record about his experience.

Mr. Jones shares his duties these days with Thomas O. Paine, formerly a General Electric Company executive, who was appointed Northrop president last year, partly to satisfy the requirements of a court judgment won in a shareholders' lawsuit over the illegal payments.

But, company officials say, even when Mr. Jones goes sailing on his 43-foot sailboat off the California coast, he is still the man in charge of Northrop, and he is the one setting the sales strategy for the company's shot at a second chance to get a share of the new fighter plane business, "the arms deal of the century."

Northrop may have a second chance thanks to the help of the Navy. After the Air Force early in 1975 chose General Dynamics's single-engine F-16 over Northrop's entry in the competition, a twin-engine jet called the F-17, the Navy waged a successful battle in Congress against adapting the Air Force plane for its carriers. Instead, the Navy will make a $12 billion investment to develop its own fleet of new fighters, and it selected a team consisting of McDonnell-Douglas and Northrop to develop the plane. The design it selected is the same F-17 that lost the Air Force competition but with folding wings and other aircraft carrier necessities. And it has a new name—the F-18 and costs about $6 million.

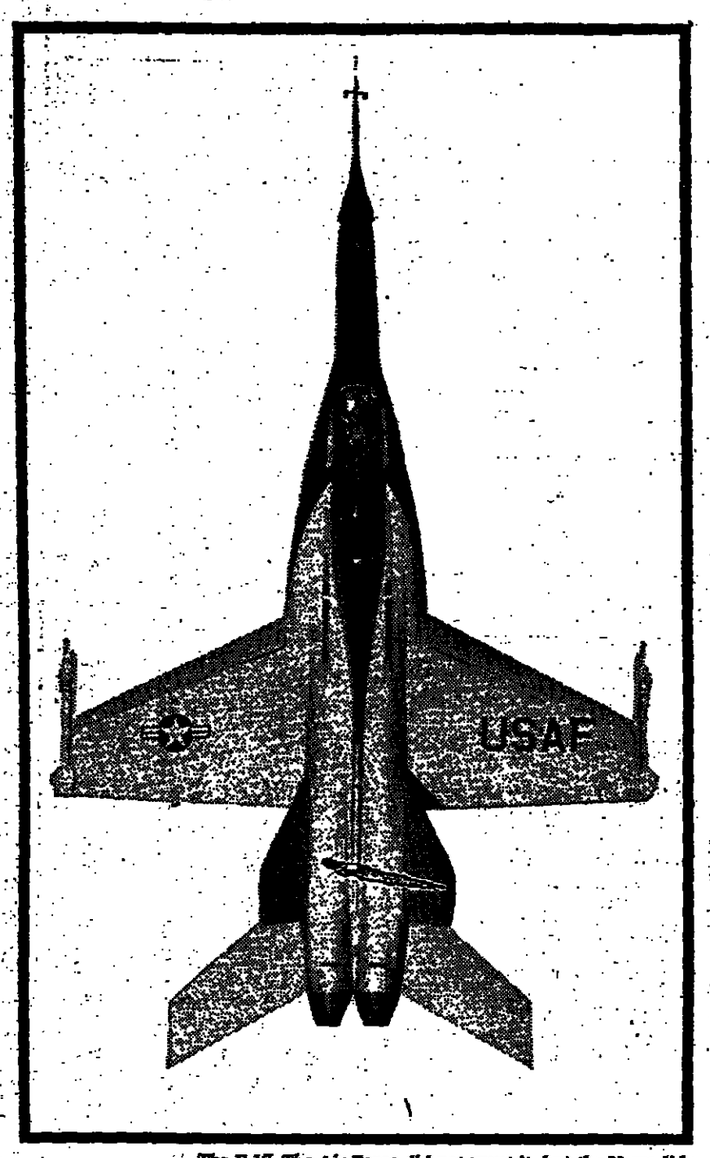
Northrop and McDonnell-Douglas not only won the right to build the plane for the Navy, but won Pentagon approval to market a land-based version of the F-18, without the folding wings and other components, to foreign countries. It is this plane that Mr. Jones began offering at the Farnborough Air Show.

Under terms of an agreement between the companies, McDonnell-Douglas will perform 60 percent of the work on the Navy version, and Northrop 40 percent. For the land-based, export version, Northrop will do 60 percent of the work and McDonnell-Douglas will do 40 percent.

The competition to sell fighter planes in the international market has been heated before, but now it will become even more so.

One Wall Street analist said:

"All the manufacturers are now talking very piously about forsaking bribes forever. Maybe they will, but when the going gets serious in some of these countries, and you're talking about getting a $500 million order by paying a couple of million under the table, do you think they'll stick to it?"



The F-17. The Air Force did not want it, but the Navy did.

...s, many people will recall ...Flying Wing," an aircraft comprised of just a single wing 172 feet tip to tip that had a brief role in history in the post-war years.

Based on an aeronautical concept espoused in the 1930's by Jack Northrop, the company founder, 11 Flying Wings were built for the Air Force, which was looking for its first post-war strategic bomber. The initial model, called the B-35, was powered by conventional engines. This was followed by the YB-49, powered by jet engines. But, eventually the Air Force decided instead on another bomber, the more conventional B-36. By October 1953 all 11 Flying Wings had been scrapped, without even one left for the Smithsonian Institution. To this day, Mr. Northrop maintains the concept is still valid, and says he would not be surprised if it is revived.

Northrop's best-known plane today is the F-5 which descended from its popular T-38 jet trainer. Almost 1,000 of these planes have been built. Although the American Air Force and Navy use a handful, mostly as "aggressor" aircraft for air defense exercises, most are on service with foreign air forces.

Why do 50,000* subscribers look to The Value Line Survey every week?

And pay $1 million a month for its stock market guidance?

Serious investors want good reasons for what they do with money. So it may be significant that today more investors pay more money, total, for The Value Line Investment Survey than for any other published advisory service. Here's one of 23 good reasons:

Good Reason No. 4

Expert judgment in municipal bonds...

Creating tax deductions by trading in municipals.

Tax exempt income isn't the only tax benefit municipals can give you. Because very often by trading municipals you can create tax deductions and retain money you would otherwise have to pay in taxes.

If you have capital gains this year, now is the time to think about reducing or eliminating the taxes due on those gains by tax swapping municipal bonds.

Because with municipals there are so many different sizes and shapes that the buy and sell can be done simultaneously, creating paper losses, while replacing your bond with an almost identical one.

And this is an opportune time to sell bonds that do not suit your investment objectives and buy bonds that do, because you can restructure your portfolio and take advantage of tax deductions at the same time.

If you would like a copy of our bulletin on tax trading municipals please return this coupon or call us collect 212-WO-4-2690

The investment that's right for you today could be wrong for you tomorrow.

If you have children, chances are you're putting money away for their education. Fine. But once you've accomplished that, what then? Suddenly, you may want to be more aggressive with your money, more speculative. Or, you may want your money to provide you with income and a regular check for retirement. The key is flexibility, one of the big advantages of introducing your money to the Oppenheimer Program of Lifetime Money Management. It lets you change your investment posture as often as your needs do... simply by exchanging one Oppenheimer portfolio for another. Which one of our five professionally managed portfolios should your money be in? To find out, just fill out the coupon below.

Tax-free income is just one benefit of tax-free bonds

The best-known feature of municipal bonds is that they provide income free from federal income taxes and, usually, free from taxes in the state where they were issued. Besides tax benefits, municipal bonds have other advantages you should know about.

Six other advantages

A new Bache Halsey Stuart booklet tells you the six other major advantages of municipals. Safety, capital appreciation, flexibility and other investment objectives are covered, as well as the various features of municipal bonds and the significance of such terms as maturity date, premium, discount and yield. You will also read about different types of bonds and how municipal bond funds fit in the investing picture.

A New Twist on the Business Lunch.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall.

When you have clients in from out of town or out of the country, why not give them something very special to remember about New York. Give them the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a world renowned ensemble that they may even have heard at home. An evening at Carnegie Hall with the BSO is a certain improvement on the business lunch.

Why not buy several subscriptions to each of the BSO series (the Orchestra plays two series of five concerts each on Wednesday and Thursday evenings at 8 o'clock in Carnegie Hall) and give them to your sales personnel. Invest a little extra in your clients, and while you're at it, give yourself the special gift of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Remember, the BSO plays to more than one million people live each year. Isn't it time you found out why.

The Myth of China Trade

By THOMAS G. CORCORAN

The death of Chairman Mao, with all of the uncertainties it implies, makes two questions more compelling than ever:

¶What may the mainland China commercial market mean in profitable business for United States exporters and shipping companies if the United States Government grants the People's Republic of China on the mainland everything it wants under the guise of normalizing relations?

¶What may such action cost United States business interests if such "normalization" requires de-recognition of the Republic of China on Taiwan and the abrogation between the United States and Taiwan of the defense treaty that now guarantees Taiwan security like that of Japan?

This will not argue that under any circumstances full diplomatic recognition should not be given to the People's Republic of China on the mainland. But it will argue that dreams of commercial profit to United States entrepreneurs do not stand up as reasons why such diplomatic recognition and "normalization" of relations should be accorded only on mainland China's dictated terms. Such terms demanding de-recognition of the Republic of China on Taiwan are to the commercial and economic disadvantage of the United States.

Compared with larger issues of international affairs, such an inquiry about commercial expectations may seem narrow. But in terms of United States politics it is important. The hope of profit is the ceaseless political driving power behind other supposedly idealistic and romantic interests rationalizing at any cost an agreement with mainland China.

What we really know about the economy of mainland China is only what Peking wants us to know. The overriding fact which we do know is that the economy of mainland China is a Government instrument.

As with all totalitarian nations, all trade with mainland China will be politically—not competitively—motivated. All such trade will be barter of advantages in political warfare. Totalitarian trade in commercial negotiations will pit competing and divided United States entrepreneurs against a monolithic totalitarian buyer and seller.

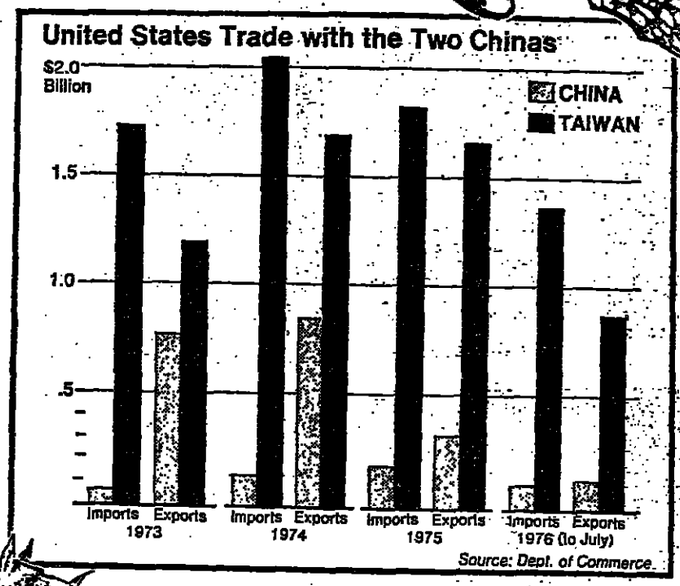
However, assume that mainland China's planned economy is doing what Peking says it is doing and that the economy desperately needs foreign technology which the United States has for export. It still does not follow that in the foreseeable future there is an opportunity for substantial American private business profits in meeting mainland China's needs.

The true indicators of what would be the application of totalitarian economics to United States free enterprise economics is clear in two specific cases. The first is the Olympic situation in Canada. The second is the 40-year experience with the totalitarian Soviet Union. Each illustrates the near impossibility of free enterprise dealing on a profitable basis with nationalistic economic pressure for political purposes.

There is no doubt—even among Canadians themselves—that the action of the Canadian Government in the Olympic case violated all the rules of supposedly nonpolitical Olympic games. Time magazine told how, several months ago when a large trading arrangement for wheat and other items was being negotiated, Peking made it clear to Ottawa that the price of the $300 million trade—and of the resulting profit to Canadian farmers—was the humiliation of the Republic of China's entry in the Olympics. The Canadian Government apparently had no choice but to yield to these demands—it was a necessitous seller.

The Republic of China on Taiwan already gives the United States economy a market 10 times that of mainland China and is developed with United States private investment of over half a billion dollars (which, incidentally may expect confiscation from a Communist takeover). In 1976, United States trade with Taiwan will reach at least $4.5 billion, up 35 percent from last year. Compare that with $450 million in erratic trade with Communist China—the ratio is 10 to 1.

The Bettman Archive



Transparent to an informed observer is the hope of withdrawal of the defense association with the United States will discourage the supporters of the Government on Taiwan about its long-term prospects against the mainland's "wave of the future." So discouraged, without physical assault, Taiwan will at some future date be open for subversion from within.

Contrary to hopes of United States industry to do business with an indefinite mainland market, the takeover of Taiwan could directly solve many of mainland China's economic problems without the cost of any of the imports from the Western world from which American exporters and transporters could make a commercial profit.

The Russians' inexpensive acquisition of German, Czechoslovakian and Manchurian plant technology and skilled labor after World War II is an irrefutable warning. So is America's commercial experience with the totalitarian Soviet Union. In 1933 the Russians held out as bait for their diplomatic recognition (the international "respectability" they wanted) token payment of some part of the debt of the previous Government to foreigners. But, immediately after United States Ambassador William Bullitt took residence in Moscow, the Soviet Government repudiated that agreement.

Ambassador Bullitt once speculated that one unsolvable commercial problem was that in the Russian ruling class there were few native Russians experienced in commercial transactions with foreign countries. "Business" was considered beneath the Russian upper class. Because of this lack of respect for or interest in private entrepreneuring, there were few Russian native commercianats trained to do business with foreigners. To this lack Ambassador Bullitt attributed some part of the failure of his hopes to take the United States out of the Depression by selling to the underdeveloped market of Russia.

Fortunately exactly the opposite situation can ultimately exist in the China case, as it already exists on Taiwan, where the people understand business ways. If the United States does not interfere with the present status of the Republic of China, it and the mainland will surely find their own method of adjustment.

While the United States cannot ignore the fact of mainland China, neither (in the long-term interest of a better united China) can it refuse to sustain those we can now be sure of: the 20 million overseas Chinese who look to Taiwan as their intellectual and cultural preservation and who are our permanent friends.

The success of United States-Taiwan business is certainly related to the kind of people who live on Taiwan. They are the American-educated Chinese who emigrated after the mainland takeover not only to Taiwan but throughout Southeast Asia. These Chinese are the cumulative result of nearly 50 years of scholarships in United States colleges, pre-war cooperation with United States banks and business and the experience of World War II cooperation in the Flying Tigers and the 14th Air Force.

In the availability of Chinese who understand private-enterprise, the United States entrepreneurs can have a situation completely different from the Soviet situation. Over such a bridge of mutual understanding, United States commerce might truly find a market in China development.

There is now no comparison between the paucity of Russians who can deal comfortably in commerce in English and the significant number of Chinese educated in English with United States attitudes.

De-recognition of Taiwan would destroy the value to United States industry of this asset of United States-educated Chinese in the overseas Chinese communities. Leaving the Chinese to their own devices—changing nothing now—is therefore prudent for any long-term eventual possibility of a market for private United States business on the Asiatic mainland.

For the purpose of United States business opportunity, the American-educated Chinese and the overseas Chinese they lead are the largest potential United States asset in non-Japanese Asia. They are nearly 20 million of non-Third World second and third generation United States-educated and consequently private-enterprise-minded overseas Chinese. In addition to those on Taiwan, these Chinese are important economically, commercially and politically in Hong Kong, the Philippines, Malaya, Thailand, Indonesia, Guam, Hawaii and even 500,000 in the continental United States.

The usefulness of the entire overseas Chinese colony to the long-run development by United States business of the market of continental Asia is tied up with keeping the overseas Chinese related to a Taiwan free of Communist domination. Deprived of this freedom, these 20 million free and free-enterprise Chinese will have no utility to United States entrepreneurs having to do business with a monopolistic Communist state concentrating in itself all buying and selling, manipulating its labor costs to dump at will and for political reasons making commercial decisions and pricings.

For these commercial reasons, among more important military and political reasons, the problem of Taiwan and mainland China should be left for all the Chinese to settle whenever they get around to it.

Books: Nader's Stab at Giant Taming

By ROBERT HESSEN

TAMING THE GIANT CORPORATION. By Ralph Nader, Mark Green and Joel Seligman. W. W. Norton & Company. 312 pages. $10.50.

In his new book Ralph Nader argues that giant corporations victimize their shareholders, employees, customers and neighboring communities.

He lays the blame on several factors: that corporate officers wield discretionary authority over the shareholders' wealth, that corporations conduct their affairs in secrecy, that the sheer size of the corporate giants makes them immune from competitive challenges and that the giants are able to shop around for a state whose corporate laws are so lax and permissive that a corporation will be able to do virtually anything it wishes. His solution for all of these alleged evils is Federal chartering of corporations.

If giant corporations were forced to obtain their charters from the Federal Government, then Congress could compel them to adopt numerous major changes, which Mr. Nader claims are essential. His demands include a drastic reduction in the decision-making powers of corporate officers. Instead, every "fundamental transaction" would have to be approved first by a board of directors consisting entirely of outsiders and then ratified by a shareholder plebiscite conducted by mail.

Mr. Nader also calls for compulsory disclosure of information sought by consumers, competitors and governmental agencies. And he advocates a stringent new test of monopoly power, designed to break up any corporation whose market share exceeds 12 percent.

Last June the Senate Commerce Committee held preliminary hearings on Mr. Nader's proposal. Next January, when Congress convenes, he will launch an all-out campaign to enact Federal chartering. Since "Taming the Giant Corporation" is intended to inspire a major piece of legislation, and since it took Mr. Nader, his co-authors and their four research assistants five years to write, this book should be judged by the highest standards.

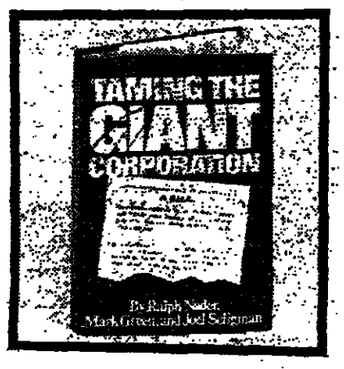
Does it make a complete and compelling case? The verdict, unequivocally, is: No. In view of Mr. Nader's theory of "advocacy scholarship"—that he has no obligation to take account of facts or theories that contradict his viewpoint—one would not expect this book to contain a balanced analysis of giant corporations and their impact on the American economy. What one would hope to find, however, is a carefully reasoned brief for one side of the debate on corporations. But Mr. Nader has failed to achieve even that limited objective.

In support of his far-reaching proposals, Mr. Nader offers a collection of undefined terms and arbitrary criteria, and many important questions are left unanswered—in fact, unraised.

He begins by asking: "If the Constitutional Convention were convened in 1976 instead of 1787, can we imagine that this time the Founding Fathers would fail to mention the business corporation?"

Why is this omission so significant? Mr. Nader answers: because giant corporations are "private governments," a term he uses repeatedly. The closest he comes to a definition is to quote a vague comment that giant corporations "have a direct and decisive impact on the social, economic, and political life of the nation." He fails to see any difference between a government that can conscript and levy taxes and a business that offers wages and products, which potential workers and customers are free to reject.

Mr. Nader calls for Federal chartering of all corporations whose annual sales exceed $250 million or which have more than 10,000 employees, but he never indicates how he chose these criteria. Nor does he define what he means by such terms as competition, monopoly and "relevant product markets," even though their precise meaning is essential to understanding and evaluating his proposals.



Nor does he explain how he decided that 12 percent of a market is the "permissible limit" for a company to hold. Since a firm can hold more than a 12 percent market share because consumers prefer its products, is Mr. Nader proposing to veto the verdict of the marketplace? If so, by what right? And in whose name?

And what evidence is there that shareholders actually want the kind of "reforms" Mr. Nader is demanding? Is it possible that he is a self-appointed spokesman for a nonexistent constituency?

Since one of Mr. Nader's chief aims in advocating Federal chartering is to reduce corporate profits, investors might like to know: Does he propose to indemnify or compensate them for the resulting decline in dividends? Mr. Nader's silence on all of these questions is puzzling indeed, given his campaign for "full disclosure."

There are some noteworthy differences between this book and a preliminary version issued last January. The early edition came under attack for its scholarly errors, including unverifiable footnotes. In the new version, the footnotes are now unnumbered and the text indicates which statements are supported by the footnotes. The reader has to turn to the back of the book after reading each sentence—a bibliographic tennis match. The only apparent reason for this change is to discourage attempts to verify the documentation.

The preliminary version also contained a list of the 1,000 largest American corporations; this book does not. The list revealed that the corporate giants include not only I.B.M., G.M. and Exxon but also The New York Times, The Washington Post, Dow Jones & Company, Time Inc., CBS, ABC, RCA (corporate parent of NBC) and several of the major trade and textbook publishers.

Why was the list dropped? My guess is that some people who endorsed Federal chartering were willing to subject business to new governmental controls as long as the realm of ideas was left free. But when they saw the list and expressed reservations about Mr. Nader's proposal because he was providing the Government with a weapon to abridge or invade First Amendment rights, his response was not to abandon or even modify his proposal but simply to delete the list.

Perhaps there is some other explanation. One hopes that Mr. Nader will choose to clarify this crucial omission and at the same time supply answers to the major questions he left unanswered. Until then, his book proposing Federal chartering does not merit serious consideration from Congress or anyone else. Caveat emptor.

Hence the concern of the French Government that another prestigious vineyard would pass to foreign ownership.

France has sought to pursue a policy —since the days of Charles de Gaulle— of keeping control of key industries, such as aviation and electronics, in French hands. In the case of Chateau Margaux, the issue involved concern with French prestige abroad.

The first bidder involved no such problems. It was Remy Martin, the French cognac producer, which, with the backing of a major insurance consortium, offered $8.2 million.

This would not have paid off all the Ginestet debts, so it was rejected.

Then Drummond C. Bell, chairman of the National Distillers and Chemical Corporation, doubled the offer to $16.4 million, and in addition pledged that the Ginestets would continue in the future to market Chateau Margaux in all of Europe.

The offer ran afoul of French honor. Pierre Ginestet quoted a Finance Ministry official as having exclaimed: "It's as if you were asking us to approve the sales abroad of the Eiffel Tower or the Mona Lisa!"

But things may be looking up again for the Ginestets. Bernard Ginestet said the other day in a telephone conversation that the Government was now examining an alternative for salvaging the company.

He said "friendly talks" were now under way with the Finance and Agriculture Ministries with a view to obtaining low-interest loans from state credit organizations. If that is successful, Chateau Margaux would not have to be sold.

In the State Banking Department in New York, Mr. Clark oversees a staff of 12, including nine bank examiners. During the first half of this year they handled 4,400 written complaints and 14,000 telephone calls by drawing on help from the Banking Department's legal staff and additional examiners.

Mr. Clark's division investigates complaints involving financial institutions under the Banking Department's supervision. This includes more than 2,000 state chartered or regulated institutions such as commercial banks, savings banks, savings and loan associations, credit unions, small loan companies, sales finance companies, check cashing operations and branches or agencies of foreign banks.

Much of the division's work consists of clarifying rules. A typical question is: "I have no complaint, but are the following interest charges on my bill too high?"

In the first six months of this year, the State Banking Department got $62,000 in refunds for 2,000 consumers who had been overcharged for banking service.

SALLY HEINEMANN

Goodbye, Fed; Hello, Morgan Stanley

Richard A. Debs, who resigned from the No. 2 job at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York in June, reported for work at Morgan Stanley & Company the day after Labor Day.

The 46-year-old Mr. Debs, who was first vice president and chief administrative officer at the New York Fed, has become president of Morgan Stanley International. The chairman of M.S.I. is his former boss, Alfred Hayes, who retired from the presidency of the New York Fed in August 1975.

But that's just a coincidence, Mr. Debs declared.

At the New York Fed Mr. Debs served as an alternate on the Federal Open Market Committee, the 12-member group responsible for setting the nation's monetary policy.

He was also deeply involved in international banking. When the Western world was awash with petrodollars following the Arab oil embargo in the fall of 1973, Mr. Debs became the Fed's principal representative to the central banks and monetary authorities of the oil-producing nations.

Wall Street has been scanning its tea leaves for the significance of the Debs move to Morgan. The once staid investment banking house has changed its image in recent years to that of a young aggressive firm.

Morgan Stanley is expanding its international operations. The planning in that area will be Mr. Debs's primary responsibility.

Why did Mr. Debs go to Morgan Stanley after 16 years with the Federal Reserve? "I thought it was time for a change," he said last week. Did the fact that he did not get the No. 1 job at the New York Fed—Paul A. Volcker, the 47-year-old former Under Secretary of the Treasury for Monetary Affairs, was named President to succeed Mr. Hayes—have anything to do with Mr. Deb's departure?

"It had to, right?" he replied, adding, "All the factors go into a decision."

¶ Liberalization of the "Individual Retirement Account" (which now gives tax-free treatment to retirement account deposits by those who have no pension plan) to make it apply to those who have very small company or local government pension plans.

The House and Senate have completed their labors, and a Senate-House conference committee has finally written the big tax bill. The entire Administration package sank without a trace, as has been true in so many areas in recent years. The liberalized Individual Retirement Account was in the House bill but was dropped by the conferees as too costly in revenues, and all the others never even got as far as the conference.

The new tax bill seems to favor consumption over investment.

But was there a setback for capital formation in the final bill, in the sense of further "tax capital?" The answer, requiring a somewhat subjective judgment, is probably: Yes, but not a very big setback.

The most important change has probably not yet been widely recognized. It involves the major toughening of the seven-year-old minimum tax, particularly as it applies to capital gains.

Anyone realizing a capital gain, of course, pays a tax. The untaxed half of capital gains has been part of the minimum tax since 1969. But, until the new law, regular taxes paid (including the capital gains tax) have counted as a full offset against the minimum tax liability.

Under the new law, only half of regular taxes paid will count as an offset. And the exemption for minimum tax purposes is cut from $30,000 to $10,000, along with an increase in the minimum tax rate from 10 percent to 15 percent. The net result is a significant increase in effective capital gains tax on those who realize large gains, in the stock market or elsewhere.

How serious this will be is a matter of judgment. But it is the exact opposite direction from that favored by Mr. Simon.

As for corporate profits—a major component of the nation's savings—the most significant element in the new bill is probably the four-year extension of the 10 percent investment tax credit, though this was not really in dispute except for the duration of the extension. Several amendments in the Senate that would have effectively raised taxes on corporations were defeated and did not reach the conferees.

On the opposite side the minimum tax as it applies to corporations was toughened somewhat. (The Treasury and such Congressional Republicans as Representative Barber B. Conable of New York think the minimum tax should never have been applied to corporations in the first place.) The revenue gain will not be great, rising to an estimated $200 million five years from now, but those businesses able to use existing tax preferences such as depletion will pay more tax.

The final bill also extended, without much debate or controversy, the $15 billion package of individual income tax reductions first enacted for antirecession purposes in 1975 and expanded a little for 1976. This is almost completely "consumption-oriented" because it is heavily weighted toward taxpayers of low and moderate income in its relative tax relief.

Thus it is fair to say that, for better or worse, the bill does not further capital formation and instead taxes capital a little more than now. While it does not reflect the severe anticapital views of some Congressional liberals, it does probably accurately reflect the general cast of the current Congress. The capital-formation crusade of the Administration and much of the business and investment community flopped.

But Mr. Simon is the first to concede, and even to assert, that there are two aspects of the capital formation problem. One is the alleged bias of the tax structure against savings and capital; the other is the size of the Federal Government's budget deficit.

There can be no dispute that the big tax revision bill of 1976, thanks mainly to the influence of the new Congressional budget control process, "preserved the revenues" and thus helped to hold down budget deficits not only for next year but also well into the future. All sorts of seemingly worthy tax giveaways, mainly added by the Senate, were thrown out.

So the Treasury will borrow less in the future than could easily otherwise have been the case and thus will soak up less of the pool of private savings. Is this an offset to the added taxes on capital? Probably not even an economist with a complicated econometric model could answer that question with any confidence.

ECONOMICS OF THE TIMES

Waiting for the Upturn

By THOMAS E. MULLANEY

THE CALENDAR indicates that there are still more than three months remaining in this rather erratic 1976, but the business world traditionally views the passage of Labor Day as the turning point into its new year and anticipates a faster tempo of economic activity.

By this time, vacation-induced slowdowns in various sectors of the economy have been ended, the changeover for the new automotive models has been completed, the crops are well along and yields are rather precisely known, economic forecasts for the year ahead are proliferating, business budgets are being drawn and the public usually has shed its summer distractions to display more interest in apparel and other products in the nation's marketplace.

So it has been again this year. In many lines the summer lull is fading fast, but there are enough uncertainties in others to raise serious questions about the vigor of the renewed upturn so widely perceived and expected in business circles.

The virtual sidewise movement of the stock-market averages the last six months seems to reflect investor conviction that no big upsurge is imminent for the economy and that the earning power of American corporations will continue to be subjected to strong cost pressures.

In the early days of this month, some of the clouds over the economy appeared to be disappearing, but the strike at the Ford Motor Company last Wednesday—not expected until the 11th hour—has injected some new clouds into the scene, bearing an ominous threat for the economic picture in the fourth quarter.

If the shutdown at Ford lasts beyond a few weeks or spreads to the other automotive producers, the economic impact could be quite severe, spreading its influence rapidly over production and employment in a wide range of American industry. The nation's steel mills, already forced to impose some scattered layoffs because of disappointing orders for construction and capital goods in recent months, would be particularly affected.

After a tour through the nation's industrial heartland between New York and Chicago and interviews with a score of top industrialists during the last two weeks, it is apparent that there is no significant pessimism in the business realm at this time. Neither is there any rampant expectation that the recovering American economy is poised for a new, overexuberant spree.

There is, instead, a mood of quiet confidence that the overall economic situation will continue to improve in a moderate and orderly fashion.

The summer pause in consumer spending, industrial production and capital-spending plans may well have passed, as Administration officials contend, though most businessmen and other analysts wonder how powerful the coming upturn will be.

Businessmen everywhere agree that the results will depend largely on the pace of inflation, the length and impact of the current strike at Ford, the state of consumer incomes and confidence, and the speed and breadth of the anticipated pickup in capital spending.

In another month the dimension of the summer slowdown will be measured more precisely in the third-quarter statistics, and there will be greater evidence at hand, one way or the other, on the contention of the Administration's economic hierarchy that a "re-acceleration" of economic activity is now in progress.

Some of the early private assessments on the current quarter's business pace are hardly satisfying. Otto Eckstein of Data Resources Inc. issued this analysis last week:

"The third quarter will show only moderate real growth, probably little different from the 4.3 percent rate of advance of the second quarter. At this stage of recovery from a very deep recession, the economy should be moving quickly. Continuation of this trend would undermine the need for the revival in capital spending, put pressure on prices and profit margins and create increasing risks that the next change in tempo would be on the down side."

Michael Evans of Chase Econometrics said his evaluation of the current quarter's performance was quite similar. He put real growth at 4 to 4¼ percent, about the same as in the preceding three months, and inflation up slightly to 5½ percent from 5.1 percent in the second quarter.

He minimized the 2.2 percent jump in retail sales for August, saying that the major factor was auto sales, mostly imported cars, and that the recent increase in personal income (at an annual rate of 5 percent or so) "was not very encouraging."

In conversations with the top officials of the automotive, steel, aluminum and retailing industries, it was clear that all were counting on high levels of real personal income and continued public confidence in buying autos, appliances and other goods to provide the spark for a continued rise in overall economic activity.

Without question, the No. 1 concern in the minds of all businessmen was the future course of inflation in this country. They were pleased with the marked slowdown in the general price level this year and hopeful that the moderation would continue. Every one cited the double-digit inflation of 1973 as the reason for the deep recession of 1974-75 and other business problems that flowed from it.

So their major concern at the moment is the danger of enlarged Government spending and Federal deficits that exacerbated the inflation picture a few years ago and caused chaos in the financial markets.

Businessmen indicate they are determined to keep their own costs and inventories under firm control and improve their corporate balance sheets. Attitudes such as that may well have prompted the firm stand taken by the Ford Motor Company against the union's demand for more time off for its members.

On the inflation front, there has been some concern recently on the upward tendency of many industrial prices, but this has been offset by the continued good news in the farm and food area.

The Agriculture Department's Sept. 12 crop estimate, based on Sept. 1 conditions, was widely hailed as a mitigating force in the inflation situation. It forecast another bumper crop of the three key foodstuffs—corn, wheat and soybeans—and led to predictions that food prices would, as a result, rise no more than 3 to 4 percent next year, or about half of the increase experienced in the last 12 months.

Economic Indicators appear on page 16.

That expectation, however, could be shattered if processing, transportation and distributing costs skyrocket or if farm exports rise sharply again to put pressure on domestic supplies. The Ford Administration, in an effort to placate farmers, is expected to mobilize a big drive under Public Law 480 to move surplus foodstuffs overseas, under easy-term credits, when the fiscal year starts Oct. 1 and funds are available for such financing.

Even those businessmen who foresee some tough sledding ahead for the economy during the rest of this year expressed confidence that 1977 would show some marked improvement, provided inflation does not get out of hand again.

Except for the strike at Ford, the scattered layoffs in steel and the lag in capital spending, there are more pluses than minuses in the current picture. Housing, while up sharply is still below the record levels of a few years ago but is promising to gain further; the public still seems to have a large appetite for new cars, appliances and other durable goods, and the number of people at work continues to rise rather strongly.

When the present impediments to increased business activity are ended, the business world expects a fairly strong resumption of the business pace in the fourth quarter and next year.

The outlook for 1977 is quite bright. The auto industry expects a 10 percent gain in sales, virtually matching its record year in 1973. Steel and aluminum producers are projecting increases of similar size, though they will still be considerably below earlier peaks. The retailing business is looking for gains in the area of 9 percent. Energy consumption, now approaching pre-embargo levels, is gaining, and so is the telephone business.

Corporate executives say the fundamentals exist, to support those expectations, but they recognize there are many things that could change the generally rosy outlook—not excepting the course of events in Washington in coming months.

Rate Outlook Buoys Stocks

The stock market, buoyed by the prospects of lower interest rates, made a moderate advance last week in heavier trading. The widely watched Dow Jones industrial average closed Friday at 995.10, up 7.15 points for the week.

Turnover on the New York Stock Exchange last week grew to 97.11 million shares from 69.53 million shares in the previous week, which had only four trading sessions because of the Labor Day holiday. On Friday the volume totaled 28.27 million shares, the largest since March 24, when it was 32.16 million shares.

Analysts attributed most of the buying interest to investors' expectations that interest rates would continue to decline. The Federal Reserve Board announced late Thursday that the nation's basic money supply in the week ended Sept. 8 dropped by $1.7 billion. This substantial decline prompted speculation that the Fed might ease the credit reins another notch, thus paving the way for lower interest rates.

Investors were also encouraged by signs that the economy might be regaining momentum. The Commerce Department reported Thursday that retail sales rose 1.2 percent during the preceding week for its second large consecutive advance. The report gave some evidence that consumers were increasing their spending after a two-month pause.

The market was indecisive earlier in the week, apparently because of the strike against the Ford Motor Company by the Auto Workers Union. The strike began at midnight Tuesday. If prolonged, the strike could further slow the nation's economy.

Another plus factor for the market was the Fed's report Thursday that industrial output climbed 0.5 percent in August.

In the credit markets, bond prices advanced in moderate trading. As a result of the drop in the nation's basic money supply, traders late Thursday raised bond prices to their highest levels of the year.

Schorr Says 'No,' House Retreats

Having gone to the brink of a major Constitutional confrontation with the press over its right to keep secret the identity of confidential sources, the House Ethics Committee will apparently now back away because it does not have the votes to force the issue to a resolution.

The dimensions of the conflict were explicit when Daniel Schorr, a CBS television newsman, appeared before the committee last week in response to a subpoena and refused to answer any questions designed to help the committee identify the person who gave him a copy of the House committee report on intelligence activities. Each time he refused, he was warned that he might be held in contempt and fined or imprisoned.

The committee voted to subpoena Mr. Schorr because it had been unable, by questioning several hundred members of the executive and legislative branches, to discover how the report was made available for publication in The Village Voice after a House vote to keep it secret. Mr. Schorr has acknowledged supplying a copy to the Voice.

Mr. Schorr rested his refusal to identify the source on both professional and Constitutional grounds. The two were related, he argued, because the failure of a newsman to abide by his professional obligation to keep sources confidential "would mean to dry up many future sources for many future reporters," thereby diminishing the ability of the press to report fully on the activities of Government. The First Amendment provides that "Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech or of the press."

Half the committee's 12 members said after the hearing that they would not vote to recommend to the full House that Mr. Schorr be held in contempt; the votes of at least seven would be required for the committee to make such a recommendation.

It is likely that some members voted to subpoena Mr. Schorr, feeling an obligation to carry out the House's mandate that the source be found, but also considered him justified in his refusal to answer. Congressmen, generally, court press attention and few members could have relished antagonizing almost all reporters over a deeply-held principle of their profession.

The committee's disinclination to have Mr. Schorr cited for contempt will probably leave the issue of newsmen's confidentiality, as a matter of law, no closer to resolution. But the failure to punish him may set a practical precedent that will discourage other such inquiries into reporters' conduct. On the other hand, as Mr. Schorr suggested, by the mere act of ordering him to testify the committee may have set a quite different example, one that could have a chilling effect on reportorial activity.

Besides the question of protecting sources, several other facets of the press's relationship to Government have become major issues in recent years, most of them involving the right to publish information deemed harmful by officials. The United States Supreme Court, in the 1971 Pentagon Papers case, affirmed the right to publish classified material without prior censorship despite a Government claim that it might damage national security. Earlier this year the Court prohibited judges, in almost all instances, from banning publication of information thought to be possibly prejudicial to a defendant's right to an unbiased jury.

Ford and Carter: Debate Number 1

The first Presidential debates since Richard Nixon and John F. Kennedy confronted each other get under way next week, presenting Gerald Ford with what even his close aides concede may be his only good chance of overcoming the lead of Jimmy Carter.

The reason it has been 16 years since Presidential candidates debated is that in each election at least one of those running considered it not worth the risk. The pressure is great, and a poor performance—a failure to display command of important information, the fact or just the appearance of a characterological weakness—is watched by many more millions on television than witness any other campaign event.

For Mr. Ford, however, debating is well worth the risk, despite his incumbency. He is far behind in the polls. Mr. Carter apparently wanted the debates to neutralize what has so far been Mr. Ford's main campaign theme, that Mr. Carter is vague and evasive.

The format of the debates, which begin at 9:30 P.M. on Thursday, includes a panel of three reporters who will ask questions of each candidate in turn; domestic affairs, including economic policy, is the subject of the first debate. The candidate will have up to three minutes to reply and two more minutes to answer a followup question. The opposing candidate then may take two minutes to comment on the answers. The candidates will not be permitted to question each other directly.

The debates will not include one Presidential candidate who has sought to participate, Eugene J. McCarthy, running as an independent. A Federal court dismissed last week the suit challenging his exclusion, but Mr. McCarthy has appealed.

Both candidates are doubtless preparing carefully for the debates; Mr. Ford, for instance, has had his staff throwing nasty questions at him to practice effective answers.

Based on their past performances in press conferences, the closest parallel to the debate situation though not comparable at all in importance or pressure, Mr. Ford is the more deliberate in his responses. That could make him appear less adroit than Mr. Carter, but it might also project the image of Presidential authority he has been seeking.

On the face of it, Mr. Carter would appear to have a considerable advantage simply by virtue of the fact that Mr. Ford, as President, has a broad record and entire Administration to defend. Mr. Ford, however, is likely to use the forum to challenge Mr. Carter directly to state specifically what he, if elected, he would do about the policies he attacks.

Both candidates campaigned last week as if they were rehearsing for the debates. Mr. Ford, repeating a prior theme, said he, in contrast to Mr. Carter, would offer "specifics, not smiles" to the electorate. Mr. Carter accused the Nixon and Ford Administrations of responsibility for the worst economic conditions since the 1930's. The candidates also took care to obey the first commandment of campaigning: secure thy home base. Mr. Ford was in Michigan and sent Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz to the Midwest farm areas; Mr. Carter campaigned in the South and before a labor audience.

One source of pressure on the candidates, the Roman Catholic Church, appeared to relent significantly last week when the National Conference of Catholic Bishops said it was neutral in the campaign. The bishops had interviewed both candidates about their positions on a Constitutional amendment to restrict abortion, creating the impression of a kind of litmus test for the Church's approval. The activity had drawn complaints from Catholics and non-Catholics that the church had been improperly injected into partisan politics.

The First Amendment Competes With Other Rights

Martim Avillez

The Press and Its Right to Silence: Not Yet Clarified

By ANTHONY LEWIS

The drama of Daniel Schorr, played out last week before the House ethics committee, focuses attention once again on an intriguing question of law and politics and the ethics of the press. That is the extent of a journalist's right—and professional obligation—to keep secret the names of sources to whom he or she has promised anonymity in exchange for information.

The value of confidential sources is not really in doubt. Anytime a reporter digs into a touchy subject, he may have to get his facts from someone who would be damaged personally or professionally if identified. After the movie of "All the President's Men" everyone understands the reluctance of some good sources to talk, and there is fear of power in city halls as well as the White House.

The question is not the reporter's need for confidence but whether the public value of that confidence outweighs other values in society. Characteristically, in this country, the question is usually put in constitutional terms. Over the last decade or so the press has developed the argument that the First Amendment, prohibiting any official abridgement of the press, protects journalists against forced disclosure of their sources.

Four years ago the United States Supreme Court met the issue directly for the first time. Under the title of Branzburg v. Hayes, the Court dealt with the cases of three reporters who had been called before grand juries and ordered to answer questions. The best known case was that of Earl Caldwell, then a New York Times reporter, who refused to say anything whatever about his conversations with Black Panther leaders.

By vote of 5 to 4, the Court rejected the reporters' claim that they had a constitutional privilege not to answer the grand jury questions. The majority opinion, by Justice Byron White, did give some constitutional status to news-gathering. "Without some protection for seeking out the news," it said, freedom of the press could be eviscerated." But the Court indicated that the press had to rely largely on its own influence in society to protect that interest, not on the law. If the issue were ultimately drawn in law, it said, the press' need had to yield to the crucial social role of the grand jury and the obligation of every citizen to testify. The opinion, delivered 12 days after the Watergate burglary, noted Chief Justice Marshall's view that even a President could be subpoenaed.

But the Branzburg decision has not proved decisive. It was somewhat ambiguous from the start because one member of the bare majority, Justice Lewis Powell, filed a concurring opinion indicating that a "legitimate need of law enforcement" would have to be shown by a grand jury to override a press desire for silence. That suggested that judges should weigh the competing values, case by case. In fact, many lower-court judges have followed Justice Powell's intimation and carefully considered whether to make journalists testify in particular circumstances. Quite often, the decision has gone in favor of the reporter, on the ground that his testimony was not really "essential" to the case at hand.

For Daniel Schorr, the setting was not a grand jury or court but a Congressional investigation. The ethics committee was trying to find out how a copy of the House Intelligence Committee report, which the full House voted to suppress, had reached Mr. Schorr and then been passed by him to The Village Voice for publication.

If Mr. Schorr were indicted for contempt for refusing to answer the committee's questions, the courts might arguably find the press interest stronger than in the grand jury setting. Judges give the integrity of the judicial process special weight. Two weeks ago, four newsmen from the Fresno, Calif., Bee were jailed for refusing to say how they got quotes from a sealed grand jury transcript; they have since been released. The Supreme Court ordered the Nixon tapes delivered to a grand jury, while lower courts rejected the Senate Watergate Committee's claim for them, saying the need was unproven.

Convictions Reversed

On the other hand, the Supreme Court, in the late 1950's, did uphold in broad terms Congress' power to conduct investigations even against claimed injury to freedom of thought and association. In later years the Court reversed a large number of convictions of persons who had refused to answer committee questions about alleged Communist associations, but those decisions all rested on procedural grounds.

In any event, Mr. Schorr is not likely to become the subject of a great new test case. The force of his argument that protection of sources "is absolutely essential to the function of the press in this country" evidently persuaded enough members of the ethics committee, whatever their feelings about the leak of the intelligence report, not to cite him for contempt. Thad Cochran, Republican of Mississippi, told him toward the end of the hearing: "I support you 100 percent in your refusal to name your source."

Curiously, that result might be regarded by Justice White and the Supreme Court majority as support for their view that the issue should be left largely to the give and take of society. Instead of writing a journalist's privilege rigidly into the Constitution, they might say, we should let the outcome be influenced by such factors as the strength of the reporter's convictions, because that instructs our democracy. In addition to Mr. Schorr's persuasiveness, the four Fresno newsmen were released last week after convincing a judge that they would never disclose their sources. Judges and legislators are coming to understand how strongly the press feels about this issue.

In Summary

'Donations' With Overseas Connections

The subject of corporate contributions to high political figures, for immediate favors or on general account, is apparently inexhaustible. Last week there was another allegation that is so far the most striking single example of the extent of the connection between domestic and foreign "donations."

In sworn testimony before a Senate subcommittee, Thomas B. Cheatham, former president of Grumman International, said that in 1972 Richard V. Allen, then an aide to President Nixon, urged the company to contribute $1 million to the Republican campaign. In return the company would get the President's "assistance" in arranging the sale of a Grumman reconnaissance airplane to Japan, according to the testimony.

Also under oath, Mr. Allen denied the allegation. He said he had nothing to do with fund-raising.

During the Watergate hearings, Herbert W. Kalmbach, Mr. Nixon's personal lawyer, and others, testified about their efforts to generate millions of dollars in cash contributions for the re-election committee from corporations, especially from those that benefit from Government actions. Grumman has not been publicly involved. The company has said it has made no political contributions.

Congress has in general shown more reluctance to investigate its own members' campaign finances than those of the executive branch, and there was new evidence of that last week. The Senate Ethics Committee voted to close its investigation into the cases of 19 Senators, including Republican Minority Leader Hugh Scott, who allegedly received illegal contributions from the Gulf Oil Corporation. Three committee members are on that list; they voted no action.

Rethinking an Easy Hijacking

The tactics used by five Croatian nationalists to slip materials for bombs—which turned out to be harmless fakes—through security machinery and then to hijack a Chicago-bound plane to Paris may lead to refinement of the antihijacking precautions. The incident also produced uncertainty over negotiations with the terrorists but there is unlikely to be any change in Washington's tough stand against such dealings.

The hijacking of the Trans World Airlines plane after it took off from La Guardia Airport was the first successful air piracy in the United States since strict security controls were introduced at the nation's airports nearly four years ago. Although the "bombs" carried by the hijackers turned out to be harmless, the fact that they were carried aboard the plane in pieces—and so were practically impossible to detect—put into doubt the efficiency of the security machinery.

There were also questions about whether or not the United States, in dealing with the Croatians, had departed from the previous policy of refusing to negotiate with hijackers.

Officials insist that these actions mean no departure from the previous tough-line policy; to be less rigid, they argue, would only encourage other potential hijackers.

The French authorities certainly took a tough line. They shot out the tires on the Boeing 727 jet and gave the hijackers this ultimatum: Surrender and be sent back to New York or face execution for air piracy in France.

The hijackers chose New York, even though a bomb they allegedly planted in Grand Central Terminal exploded and killed a policeman. They have been charged with murder as a result. They also face charges of air piracy.

They are being questioned, however, in connection with other terrorist activities. The acknowledged leader of the hijackers, Zvonko Busic, has admitted to the Queens District Attorney's office, for example, that he was at La Guardia airport last Dec. 29, shortly before a bomb went off in the main terminal killing 11 persons. But Mr. Busic has emphatically denied any connection with that explosion.

Sunshine Act Is Now Law

Most independent Federal agencies and regulatory commissions may do significantly more of their business in public from now on as a result of the Government in the Sunshine Act, signed by President Ford last week. The precise effect of the act in promoting openness will depend upon the way the agencies respond to it; on a broad range of matters, they are permitted to continue to deliberate in private.

The act, whose purpose is to promote confidence in the fairness of official decisions, requires an agency to schedule open meetings unless a majority of its board votes to hold a closed session on an exempt topic. Among those are national defense and foreign policy, law enforcement, agency rules practices and personnel, legal proceedings, trade secrets, bank audits and matters that might invade an individual's personal privacy.

The act also prohibits by law a practice that was already forbidden by most agency rules: informal, unrecorded contacts between officials and parties to formal adjudicatory proceedings—for example, involving license applications—before the agency. The act, however, will permit informal contacts on most other matters to continue. Some critics of the agencies have contended that such contacts unduly influence official decisions.

President Ford was not in favor of the sunshine bill. Many of its procedures, he said, were unnecessarily complicated and cumbersome, particularly a requirement for transcripts to be made of closed sessions. He apparently signed the bill because a veto would have been politically unpopular and because the bill had passed the House and Senate with majorities large enough to override a veto.

Auto Union Strikes Ford

The United Auto Workers union has begun a strike against the Ford Motor Company that is certain to have a harmful effect on the nation's economy if it lasts a long time. The strike was evidently precipitated by a disagreement in principle over the manner of reducing working time.

Should the 165,000 workers stay out more than a month, the strike could disrupt the steel and rubber industries, which are important suppliers of car components. A prolonged strike would also have an unsettling psychological effect on the business community because the automobile industry has been one of the more vigorous elements in an otherwise not-very-robust recovery from the recession.

The immediate effects will be felt within the automotive industry. The shutdown of Ford's 22 plants puts it at a serious competitive disadvantage with respect to the other two major automobile manufacturers, General Motors and Chrysler, just as the 1977 model year is beginning. The union's strategy, in striking just one company, is to pressure it into accepting contract terms that will favorably influence negotiations with the other manufacturers.

Only token bargaining was conducted in the last few days before last Tuesday's strike deadline, apparently because the threshold issue of reduced working time was unresolved. As a device for creating more jobs, the union has asked for a number of regularly scheduled days off to be granted automatically to all employees. The company has offered to institute a system under which it would control the allotment of days off, taking into account such factors as seniority and absenteeism and being able to substitute pay for time.

The other main issues in the talks, scheduled to resume tomorrow, concern the union's request for an increase in wages and in the company's contribution to a fund for supplementing the unemployment benefits of laid-off workers.

Congress Acts On Abortions

Congress has approved and sent to President Ford legislation banning the use of Medicaid funds for most abortions. The issue has been raised before, but the Senate has consistently refused to restrict Medicaid. The difference this year apparently has been the persistence of the antiabortion lobbyists, a force whose influence has increased markedly.

One clear effect of the legislation will be to make it much more difficult for poor women to gain abortions. Medicaid paid an estimated $2 million for 45,000 abortions in New York City alone last year.

Critics of the legislation also argued that the restrictions will result in an increase in deaths and illnesses among infants and mothers forced to obtain illegal abortions.

Congress Votes JFK Probe

The House of Representatives has voted to begin new investigations into the murders of President John F. Kennedy and the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., the civil rights leader.

A special commission under the late Chief Justice Warren reported in 1964 that there was no evidence that anyone other than Lee Harvey Oswald was involved in the Kennedy killing. Despite many attempts to discredit the report, that essential finding has never been successfully challenged.

James Earl Ray pleaded guilty to killing Dr. King, but Mr. Ray has since retracted his confession and sought a new trial.

A Debater's Art Is All Wit and Witticism

By ANTHONY E. DAVIS

The Republican and Democratic Presidential candidates will commence this week a series of face-to-face encounters that have been described as debates. To the extent that the candidates adhere to the traditional structure of a formal debate, they will be practicing a form of disputation that has been developed to a fine art in collegiate societies and legislative chambers.

Debate in the classic manner must at all costs be distinguishable from its feeble counterpart, the "discussion." In discussion the participants have a peculiar, altruistic desire to pool their collective wisdom, the better to inform and educate the listener. No such conceit burdens the true debater. His concern is solely competitive; accurate information is a tool to be used only when humor fails.

The ultimate aim in debate is to make the opponent appear ridiculous. Since the primary weapon is vocabulary, the crucial skill required is verbal dexterity, supported by intellectual vivacity. By definition, even in these days of film and recording, the debate is an ephemeral medium, so that it is instant brilliance, preferably at the other side's expense, rather than lasting genius that counts. The successful debater seeks at least as fervently to denigrate his opponent's case as to build his own. His goal is not necessarily to be absolutely right, but to be more convincing. At the end of the day he hopes, like a boxer, to have landed more (verbal) punches than he has taken. Victory, is measured by the redness of the loser's cheeks.

Of course, as in any form of theater, words alone may be insufficient. The telling gesture—whether this would encompass The Smile remains to be seen—and the dramatic use of voice can be of immense value. As in other forms of theater, timing is all important. In short, a good debate should be a genuine "performance" on the part of all concerned. Unlike theater, however, there are rules in classic debating.

The structure requires that a third party, preferably disinterested, state the topic for the adversaries, normally teams of two debaters, to dispute. Usually, the topics or "motions" are wildly general. Perhaps the most famous debate ever staged outside a legislative chamber was at the Oxford Union, an undergraduate debating society, in the 1930's on a pacifist motion declaring unwillingness to fight for king and country. The loss by the team opposing the motion—the audience, as is customary, was asked to vote—caused a national uproar. A similarly catastrophic loss, in the eyes of many observers, was sustained three decades later by the Archbishop of Canterbury and Malcolm Muggeridge, an evangelist, at the hands of two atheists on a motion in the Cambridge Union, postulating the existence of God.

In the usual debating format, one side commences by "proposing" its case. The proposer's task is to state the proposition irrefutably; the first speaker for the opposers then comes along and tries to be at least equally as convincing on behalf of the dramatically opposite proposition while deviously and, if possible, humorously undermining the proposer's arguments.

This initial stage of the proceedings often takes the form of prepared speeches and may appear stilted. But then, with the "seconders" for each side, follows the ad-lib fireworks, each side pecking away, forcefully but always elegantly, at the other's position.

A number of verbal ploys are used by experienced debaters. Among these is the carefully framed rhetorical question whose only plausible answer is disparaging to the respondent. Another technique is the well-planned irrelevancy, designed to disguise from the audience the weaker points in the debater's own arguments. One of the most effective stratagems is the reductio ad absurdum, whereby the debater carries his opponent's arguments to such an extreme that they appear absurd.

Some debaters resort to ad hominem, personal insults designed to ridicule and undermine the credibility of their opponents. Although the technique is usually frowned upon, there is really only one cardinal sin in debating: to be boring. A debater may be serious if the topic warrants, but it is usually considered obligatory for him to insert at least a thread of humor into his performance as an antidote for yawns. So even an insult may be overlooked if it provokes laughter.

Some of the more illustrious of the world's debating societies have their own, idiosyncratic rules. In the British Parliament, for instance, the ad hominem insult is deplored. There is a whole literature, the product of centuries of individual rulings, defining what is or is not permissible to say of an opponent. For instance, a member of Parliament may not call a fellow member a "liar," although he may accuse him of uttering "a terminological inexactitude." Members have also been reprimanded for calling their opponents "villain," "swine" and "murderer." In the United States Congress, debate rarely gets so personal, chiefly because it takes the form of members giving speeches.

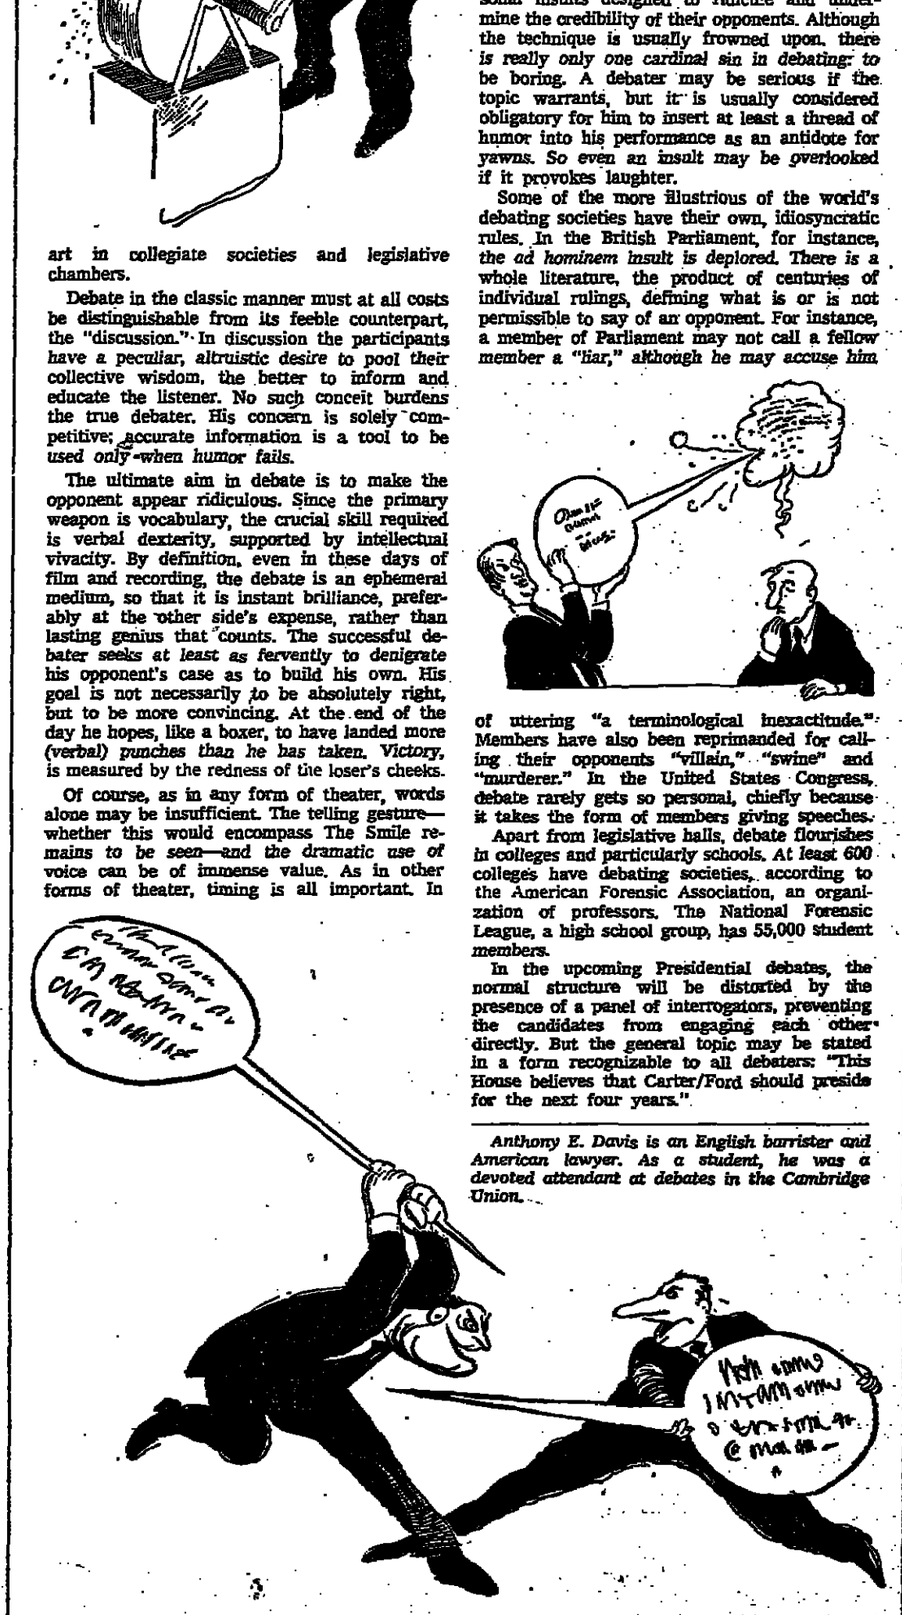
Apart from legislative halls, debate flourishes in colleges and particularly schools. At least 600 colleges have debating societies, according to the American Forensic Association, an organization of professors. The National Forensic League, a high school group, has 55,000 student members.

In the upcoming Presidential debates, the normal structure will be distorted by the presence of a panel of interrogators, preventing the candidates from engaging each other directly. But the general topic may be stated in a form recognizable to all debaters: "This House believes that Carter/Ford should preside for the next four years."

Anthony E. Davis is an English barrister and American lawyer. As a student, he was a devoted attendant at debates in the Cambridge Union.



He Is a Candidate

For Gene McCarthy, 1968 Goes On and On

By JOSEPH LELYVELD

WASHINGTON—The case Eugene J. McCart presents for himself as an independent candidate President rests on a disarming but shaky syllogis If current trends continue, Democrats and Rep licans are likely to be outnumbered one of th days by voters who regard themselves as indepe ents; Mr. McCarthy is the candidate of the in pendents; therefore, he is a serious candidate.

The obvious flaw in this logic is that Mr. M Carthy became the candidate of the independe by a process of self-anointment. It is less t obvious that they are even aware of his candid in any significant numbers, or that they have a thing in common as a group besides their disaffi tion from the established parties. So long as t don't seem to know or care that Mr. McCarthy running in their name, his challenge to the part is apt to be dismissed as the wispy hope of a s of singularly high principle or, less kindly, a expression of petulant pride.

But if writing off the McCarthy candidacy co have stopped it, it would have expired months a Instead, the former Democratic Senator from M nesota is managing to arouse the first glimmeri of interest, if not support, by making an iss ingeniously but not implausibly, of his inability reach his chosen constituency. The issue, as presents it, is simple fair play: How can a politi system be regarded as open, he asks, if it denies hearing to all but the representatives of two parti

Mr. McCarthy saves his sharpest barbs for t new campaign spending law, which provides f public financing of the two major candidates f President. "The Incumbents Protection Act," calls it. But if his argument that the system rigged is now beginning to be noticed, it is than mainly to the phenomenon of television debate Paradoxically, it is Mr. McCarthy's well-publicize exclusion from the encounters between Presid Ford and Jimmy Carter, which begin this week, t has helped to make his candidacy visible.

Visible doesn't mean viable; at least it hasn't far. But it is now possible for survey takers a others looking for political trends to go doorbe ringing in Middle America and discover small nu bers of real voters with a positive, or casual intere in finding out what Mr. McCarthy is up to.

Depending on the poll, 2 to 10 percent of t electorate express an interest in voting for him. T wide variation may reflect a statistical margin error or the dimness with which his candidacy perceived. More likely, it reflects the way differ pollsters frame and pose their questions.

The real question seems to be whether Mr. Carthy can sustain a perception of himself a national candidate. He has been saying for mon that he will finally be on the ballot in 40 to states. A survey by The New York Times last w reported that he was securely on the ballot in states, and strongly indicated that he is unlikely reach even 30.

Seeking the Protest Vote

It will be difficult enough for Mr. McCarthy overcome to any noticeable degree the reluctan voters have traditionally shown to "waste" th ballots in Presidential elections by casting prote votes for noncontenders.

Still, it is not hard to imagine that even 2 or percent of the vote could trip the balance betwe the Democratic and Republican tickets in some the states in which Mr. McCarthy's presence on t ballot is either certain or reasonably so—key state such as Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Ne Jersey and New York.

The candidate contends that he will be claimi the votes of independents who might otherwise st home, but that is another untested thesis. The co mon assumption in political circles is that the vot for this former Democrat would nearly all be su tracted from Mr. Carter's column.

Will people really vote for Mr. McCarthy simp because they think he deserves to be heard? Or w they wait to hear him? The repeal of the campai spending law and the strengthening of the "equ time" provision of the Federal Communications A are not the only planks in his platform but they ar the only ones that have been communicated to discernible degree so far.

The others, which Mr. McCarthy will unveil in *series of television talks if he can raise the fund*touch on tax reform, defense spending and energy Mr. McCarthy promises to chop deeply into th Pentagon's budget and to require Detroit to stop building big cars—proposals, whatever their merits, that seem unlikely to stir much enthusiasm among the independent voters he hopes to address.

Even more remote from the daily concerns o those voters is his Hamiltonian advocacy of a re vival of the Electoral College as a meaningful part of the constitutional system. On Oct. 8th, Mr. McCarthy plans to convene an assembly of electors pledged to his candidacy and to reveal at that time the name not only of the Vice Presidential candidate on his ticket for November but also the names of potential cabinet officers in a McCarthy Administration.

The personal following he won in 1968 when he challenged Lyndon Johnson and the Vietnam war has long since melted away. Traveling around the country by himself to address small fundraising gatherings, without an entourage of any kind, Mr. McCarthy must recognize that this is so. Yet there is a sense in which 1968 seems never to have ended for him.

The most brutal comment that has been made so far on the quixotic nature of his quest came at the end of a five-minute commercial that he himself broadcast this month on network television. It was a film clip of a crowd in a large auditorium, on its feet and passionately chanting, "We want Gene! We want Gene!"

It was obvious that the film was out of date. In fact, it was shot in Santa Barbara, Calif., in 1968. This is 1976 and Mr. McCarthy hasn't heard a chant like that yet. But if he gets some satisfaction out of playing his old movies to a national audience, it is fair to assume that he is waiting to hear that same sweet siren call again.

Kissinger Is In Africa

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger is now deep into his urgent shuttle diplomacy in southern Africa. It still is not clear, though, whether he is moving in a straight line that will lead to diplomatic solutions, or on a merry-go-round.

Last week's movements were closely planned. He met first in Tanzania with President Julius K. Nyerere, then in Zambia with President Kenneth A. Kaunda to inform those two important black leaders of his intentions. He went to Pretoria where he met with Prime Minister John Vorster and possibly with Rhodesia's Prime Minister Ian D. Smith. Tomorrow he will return to Zambia and Tanzania to report to Mr. Kaunda and Mr. Nyerere.

All that activity is designed to (1) break a deadlock in negotiations over the independence of South-West Africa, the territory Pretoria rules against a United Nations mandate; (2) force Mr. Smith to accept the principle of eventual black rule in Rhodesia, and convince black Rhodesian guerrillas to resume their negotiations, and (3) press Mr. Vorster to reform apartheid practices in South Africa.

One reason it has been difficult to see whether Mr. Kissinger is on a fruitful course is that all the African leaders he has met—black and white—publicly have taken hard lines. Mr. Nyerere said he still believes only war will settle the issue in Rhodesia, for example, and Mr. Smith has said again he will never yield power. Those positions might lead to a pessimistic assessment, or they might be, as Mr. Kissinger has suggested, rhetoric for purposes of negotiating later on.

Meanwhile, the violence continues in South Africa. More than 300 persons, mainly blacks, have been killed. Last week six people reportedly were killed in demonstrations in Johannesburg protesting Mr. Kissinger's visit, and 16 during a strike that kept tens of thousands of workers away from their jobs at white-owned businesses in Johannesburg and other cities.

China to Russia: No Change Now

Peking has rejected messages of condolence on the death of Mao Tse-tung from Communist Parties in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, indicating that for now, at least, China's hostility toward Russia remains unchanged.

There had been speculation that with Chairman Mao gone, Peking's attitude might change, because it was Mao who had directed China's split with the Kremlin. On several occasions during the last two decades Chinese and Soviet forces have clashed on the long border between the two countries and at times the threat of war seemed real.

After Mao's death, the Soviet Communist Party sent a brief message of sympathy, believed to be the first inter-party communication since the 1960's. Peking officials rejected the gesture because as one Chinese official said: "We have no party-to-party relations with them."

Still No Law of the Sea

The fifth session of the United Nations Law of the Sea Conference has ended in New York without an agreement on the most important issue, how to control the exploitation of minerals in the deep seabeds of the world's seas and oceans. The failure was expected. The question now is whether the United States and a few other countries with advanced technology will unilaterally begin to mine the wealth of the seas.

The conference broke down because of a dispute between the developing countries, which wanted an international seabed authority to control all the exploitation, and the developed countries, which wanted some degree of autonomy.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger has warned that in the absence of an international treaty, America would unilaterally begin to mine the seabeds. A sixth session of the sea law conference will be held in May; there is slim hope for an agreement beyond the speculation that developing countries may feel greater pressure to reach agreement when they see that they are being left out of any role in the seabed exploration.

Until Successor Is Found, There Will Probably Be Collective Leadership

Without Mao, China Is Even Less Fathomable

By FOX BUTTERFIELD

HONG KONG—With the end of the elaborate memorial services for Chairman Mao Tse-tung, China now begins the task its great "Helmsman" was unable to fulfill: the search for new leaders to continue his unfinished revolution.

Who the leaders will be and how closely they will hew to Mao's demanding revolutionary vision are questions few of China's 800 million people or analysts in Hong Kong can confidently answer.

At his death, Mao left no designated successor. Indeed, over the years he toppled a series of men he felt weren't ready for power, including most recently last spring the former Deputy Prime Minister, Teng Hsiao-ping.

To complicate the situation, by an irony of history, China this year has also lost its head of government, Prime Minister Chou En-lai, and its equivalent of a head of state, Chu Teh. The country has been involved in a bitter political campaign, and has been shaken by a devastating earthquake. Public discipline has begun to break down, and there have even been reports of bank robberies and a police strike.

It seems unlikely that these troubles seriously threaten the Communist regime, but if there are any clues to the events to come, they might lie in the repeated calls in the Chinese press last week to carry Chairman Mao's "cause" and the constant appearances of China's surviving leaders in strict party rank.

The most likely course, this suggests, is for a transitional collective leadership, built around the current senior party leaders. Presumably, for the sake of party unity and since none of them exercises dominant power, they will hold roughly to China's present course. Or, as an editorial in Peking's papers said, to follow an injunction by Mao to "act according to principles laid down."

The highest-ranking man in China is Hua Kuo-feng, a tall, burly, crew-cut party administrator who was made First Vice-Chairman of the party and Prime Minister last April after an extraordinary day-long demonstration by 100,000 people in Peking. At the time, Mr. Hua was regarded as a compromise choice, acceptable to all sides in Peking.

Although Mr. Hua was relatively obscure only a year ago, he seems to have swiftly established a centrist position for himself, echoing the rhetoric of the antirightist campaign, but apparently with little fervor. In this, some analysts think, Mr. Hua may be a good representative of a second generation of Chinese leaders, a post-Maoist man. He recognizes the need not to alienate China's leftists, or so-called "radicals," while quietly carrying out a more pragmatic course.

Although there is no definite evidence, some analysts suspect the late Prime Minister Chou may have spotted Mr. Hua and helped bring him up so he could eventually assume his present role.

After Mr. Hua come the other three surviving members of what was once the nine-member standing committee of the party Politburo, the nation's highest decision-making body: Wang Hung-wen, a leftist former textile-mill cadre from Shanghai who is about 40 years old; Yeh Chin-ying, ailing 78-year-old Minister of Defense, and Chang Chun-chiao, a smooth though somewhat shadowy former Shanghai party organizer who like Mr. Wang rose to prominence in the Cultural Revolution.

Of these three, Mr. Wang is considered too young and Mr. Yeh too old to take control over a long period of time. That leaves Mr. Chang as the strongest possible rival for Mr. Hua. He is highly regarded as being capable, and his additional post as head of the general political department of the armed forces gives him further authority.

Several other key figures could be advanced to the standing committee of the Politburo: Chen Hsi-lin, the commander of the vital Peking military region and a party "moderate," Wu Teh, Mayor of Peking, another veteran administrator, and Chiang Ching, Chairman Mao's widow, an outspoken advocate of his ideas.

More important than the leaders themselves, perhaps, is the question of how faithfully Mao's successors will carry out his ideas. For China's people, this is the critical issue.

Mao's faith was a stern, demanding one, and the measures he advocated, designed to prevent Communist China from slipping back into the bureaucratic ways of traditional China, or the "revisionism" of the Soviet Union, were not always popular. Since the Cultural Revolution, Mao had made workers give up their bonuses and wage raises, ordered millions of urban students to resettle the countryside after graduation from school, and required scientists and party cadres to spend much of their time in manual labor. Entrance to China's universities was made dependent on a student's political background, and the emphasis in medicine was switched to rural health care.

To some extent, China's radicals and moderates can be divided by their attitude toward these policies. But the situation is complicated by bitter personal animosity, and many Chinese cannot be grouped with either faction.

Whoever emerge as China's new leaders will inherit an economy that has achieved a remarkable record of growth, but one which faces difficulties. Over the last 15 years, China's industrial production has increased by nearly 10 percent a year, its agricultural output by 2 to 4 percent. Under Mao's guidance—and Mr. Chou's—China built nuclear weapons, launched satellites and has become a major oil producer. But a common sight in China is still to see peasants spreading fertilizer on their fields, and China's population has been growing about 2 percent a year, not far behind the growth in the food output.

Mao himself wavered in the view of what would come after him, though he was realistic enough to recognize that he had not placed an immutable stamp on China. In 1,000 years, he once said, even Marx and Lenin might "appear rather ridiculous."

Last spring, in one of the last quotations attributed to him, he turned back to his own belief in the inevitability of struggle. "Without struggle there can be no progress. With a population of 800 million, how can we do away with struggle." It was a battle the chairman would have relished.

The War Wrecked the Economy, but Vietnam Has Experienced Leadership

Hanoi Hopes to Rebuild With U.S. Help

By NAYAN CHANDA

HONG KONG—As they reconstruct Vietnam after three decades of war and revolution, the leaders in Hanoi are looking toward their recent enemy, the United States: They want American capital and technology to develop their energy resources and agriculture.

Hanoi believes that normalization of relations with Washington will not be long delayed, despite the compulsions of American electoral politics which apparently helped upset Vietnamese diplomatic moves at the United Nations last week. Since United States forces have been withdrawn from mainland Southeast Asia, Hanoi seems inclined to place less emphasis on instigating a "people's war" there than in developing fruitful cooperation with its neighbors.

The economic and social difficulties confronting Hanoi's leaders are enormous. As the war ended, the South's artificial economy, supported by huge transfusions of American aid, was wrecked. The flight of the owners and a lack of imported raw materials had led to the closing of many factories. Unemployment, aggravated by the disbanding of the former South Vietnamese armed services, reached 3.5 million. An acute shortage of draught animals, agricultural impleiments and lack of irrigation stowed the agricultural recovery. The 300,000 tons of unexploded bombs and shells in Vietnam's soil continued to take a human toll.

The first objective of the new leaders is to achieve self-sufficiency in food and reducing unemployment. The Hanoi Government hopes to bring 1.5 million hectares of additional land under cultivation and resettle 8 million people from the overcrowded cities as part of a drive toward that objective.

More than 1.5 million people have already left cities for their villages or for development areas called the new economic zones. It is believed that with work the fertile lands in the South could soon make the country self-sufficient in food and even turn it into a major exporter of agricultural products and help redress a trade imbalance.

At present, China provides rice, machinery, oil, textiles and other consumer articles on a long-term interest-free loan basis. The Soviet Union and other East European countries provide heavy machinery and industrial raw materials and import a small quantity of agricultural products and recently some ready-to-wear clothes from Saigon's mills.

To administer the reconstruction, Vietnam has the advantage of an unusually experienced leadership. Most Government and party leaders, from the older figures such as Le Duan, the party secretary, and Prime Minister Pham Van Dong, to the "younger" ministers such as 49-year-old Mrs. Nguyen Thi Binh, were in Ho Chi Minh's ranks during the anti-French resistance more than two decades ago.

Policy differences and debates have been resolved within the limited circle of the top leadership. Consensus inside the party and neutrality between Moscow and Peking have become so much of an enshrined policy that anybody calling for a campaign against "capitalist roaders" inside the party or advocating alignment with either of the great Communist powers would be condemned as heretic.

The apparent unity does not indicate total ideological unanimity. There has been speculation about differences between the Southern Provisional Revolutionary Government leadership and that of Hanoi. This is largely due to the lingering notion, fostered by Hanoi during the war for tactical reasons, that the Southern group had a mind of its own.

But, since the end of the war, no doubt has been left about the supreme role of the North Vietnamese Worker's Party in running the South's affairs. Barring a few non-Communist intellectuals, most southern leaders have been revealed as workers party members. With their colleagues in Hanoi, many of whom also are southerners, they have devoted their lives to realizing the common dream of a unified and Socialist Vietnam.

While leadership differences along the North-South lines are unlikely, certain foreign observers in Hanoi detect differences of emphasis in implementing the commonly accepted program. Some leaders, especially from the army and security services, are seen as particularly concerned about order and security. This line is joined by ideologues such as Truong Chinh who are preoccupied with strengthening the dictatorship of the proletariat and creation of a Socialist man. Others, such as Pham Van Dong, lay greater emphasis on promoting economic development as well as reconciliation with the non-Communist world.

Outside the Communist circle, however, political difficulties persist. In the South the severe loss of cadres in the last years of the war, especially those murdered in the United States Central Intelligence Agency's Phoenix "program," the need to control the million former soldiers of the South and the deep-rooted anti-Communism of the Saigon bureaucracy and urban middle class have created security troubles. The continued detention of thousands of former Saigon officials in "re-education camps" has enforced calm, but this has been partly offset by the high-handed or maladroit actions of inexperienced cadres from the jungles of the North. Corruption by Saigon's decadent life-style has also been a negative factor.

But what marks the new regime from the one in Saigon is the incorruptibility of its leadership and its ability to admit failures and punish its own corrupt members. An official Saigon daily recently rebuked a small number of "rotten, regressive and autocratic" cadres for arbitrary arrests, confiscation of people's property and acceptance of bribes. A number of corrupt officials have already been jailed.

Economics Of Racism in South Africa

By JOHN F. BURNS

JOHANNESBURG—A cartoon in one of the newspapers here last week showed Prime Minister John Vorster, apron tied to his ample waist and broom in hand, greeting Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger at the door of Mr. Vorster's official residence.

"Excuse the mess," the Prime Minister was saying, "but the help hasn't turned up."

In homes and offices, on farms and factory floors, from one end of South Africa to the other, whites are learning to take over menial tasks normally performed by blacks. Last week, a three-day protest strike in Johannesburg, the second in three weeks, halved the black labor force. It was a telling demonstration of the potential that black workers have to cripple an economy that has been underpinned for decades by an inexhaustible supply of cheap, docile and unorganized labor.

After three months of battling with heavily armed police and a death toll of more than 300, demonstrators in the black townships evidently have decided that political power, for them, is more likely to grow out of idle lathes and abandoned brooms than the barrels of guns, which the law in any case denies them. The message has permeated a white community that has become inured to the daily bloodshed in the townships, prompting insistent pleas for racial reform from the normally conservative captains of industry and commerce.

The scene in Johannesburg, economic hub of the country, gave a foretaste of the disaster the corporate barons wish to avert. Building sites stood idle, textile plants barely ticked over, delivery trucks sat in rows outside warehouses.

The extent to which the country's 4.2 million whites have been sustained by the labor of its 18 million blacks is starkly apparent in the Government's own statistics, which suggest that scarcely any sector of the economy could function for long without black workers. Of the 4.9 million fulltime workers registered last year, slightly over half, 2.7 million, were black, 1.5 million were white, 526,740 were of mixed race, and 181,066 were Asian. The dominant role played by blacks is more evident from the industry-by-industry breakdown. In gold mining, the pillar of the economy, the labor force of 380,091 included 341,575 blacks. Figures for other sectors show a similar ratio: coal mining, 190,596 (134,012); construction, 446,086 (309,094); textiles, 97,628 (66,939); and food processing, 159,577 (103,286). Only in the public sector were the averages significantly lower: In public service, 461,948 (178,530); and the railways, 244,892 (113,406).

Figures for income by the various race groups show a huge disproportion. Whites, constituting 30.6 percent of the fulltime labor force, earned 68.2 percent of the wages and salaries in 1973. Blacks, 55 percent of the labor force, earned 21.1 percent.

The Government asserts, fairly, that black incomes have risen much faster in recent years that whites'. Between 1970 and 1975, the real earnings of whites increased only 1.3 percent, compared with 8 percent for blacks. However, the effort to close a gap which had been progressively widening until the late 1960's made only a vestigial impact on the disparities. Average annual income among urban whites is estimated to be about $6,000; among urban blacks, most of whom are restricted to unskilled work, is between $860 and $1,600. In June skilled workers in the construction industry, almost all white, were earning an average of $122 a week; unskilled workers, almost all black, $39. What this means can be judged by the Johannesburg Chamber of Commerce's estimate that the subsistence income for a family of five in Soweto in May 1975 was $136 a month.

With only 5.6 million blacks living in urban areas, less than a third, a truer picture of the bleak economic circumstances in which most blacks live is given by figures for those living in the countryside. In 1973, the average annual income among black farm laborers was $250. But an equal number of blacks were living, if barely, off their own meager plots, earning less than $100 a year. In the tribal homelands, where nearly 8 million blacks live, the vast majority live outside the cash economy altogether, grazing cattle and bartering as their forebears did.

Government officials argue that the relevant comparison is not between whites and blacks in South Africa, but between South Africa's blacks and blacks elsewhere on the continent. By this standard, they say, blacks are vastly better off here than they are elsewhere. "In Johannesburg alone, blacks have a larger purchasing power than the gross national product of Sierra Leone, Malawi and Botswana, to mention only three," one official recently claimed. However, the claim is disputed by many economists. One private estimate puts the average per capita income among South African blacks 12th among African countries.

Officials also point proudly to the existence of a black middle class, claiming that it is the only one of any size on the continent. Before disorders erupted in Soweto, whites taking the official tour of the township were driven down Pioneer Avenue, described as the "millionaires row" of the township. In many ways, the street—a few dozen ranch-style homes, amid 102,000 boxlike houses built by the Government, with an average of 6.7 people in four rooms—serves as a symbol for the economic status of Soweto. At the top sits Ephraim Tshabelala, who built a fortune out of a gas station, a cinema, and a chain of grocery stores; in the middle, a small middle class; and at the bottom, a huge mass of unskilled workers.

Probably the best measure of the middle class is Government's manpower survey, which lists the nu of blacks employed in the various professions. In 1975 the survey showed a total of 11 engineers, 31 chem 63 lawyers, 83 university teachers, 85 doctors and journalists and writers. Only in school teaching, w there were 74,980 blacks and 54,928 whites, and an policemen, where there were 31,109 blacks and 2 whites, did blacks outnumber whites.

The growth of the middle class has been artific restrained by the limited opportunities for vocational professional training and by the system known as reservation." Enshrined in law and jealously guarded the white trade unions, the system sets aside certain sk jobs—accounting for an estimated 2.5 percent of all dustrial jobs—for whites. The restrictions are concentr in the motor mechanics and building trades. Last yea the construction industry, overwhelmingly dependent blacks for heavy labor, there were only 1,424 black artis compared with 30,912 white ones. Attempts by emplo to persuade unions to open new opportunities to bl are strongly resisted; in construction, it took years blacks to be allowed to lay bricks, and then only s bricks, which are covered later by plaster or stucco national strike in the diamond cutting industry was ave at the last minute a few months ago when the un agreed to allow blacks to cut stones—but only small o accounting for a minor proportion of the total.

While they support other reforms, industrial execut are candid about their reasons for opposing wider un ization among blacks. In many sectors, especially min employers claim that the rapid wage increases of the l five years have already driven their profit margins dan ously low. In gold mining, where experienced black min can earn up to $200 a week, less than half the $552 m mum paid to whites working underground, a decisio equalize minimum pay scales for the two groups wo industry experts say, bankrupt at least 16 of the 42 m now in operation. The same is probably true for m other industries, especially when the plunging gold p has driven business into the depths of a recession.

A Hitch in the Bergman Plea Bargaining

The sentencing of Bernard Bergman, the New York nursing home entrepreneur, has caused public complaint and profound disagreement in the law and judicial communities and has prompted debate about the seemingly arbitrary and imperfect nature of sentencing. Last week, Mr. Bergman, the central figure in the investigation of fraud and abuses in the state's nursing home industry, began serving a four-month prison term for the Federal crimes of Medicaid and tax fraud. At the same time, he was sentenced in State Supreme Court to a year's confinement for the crime of bribing a public official. Now Mr. Bergman's lawyers, charging that the plea bargaining under which he admitted guilt had been breached, are seeking to withdraw the plea of guilty to the state indictment.

The four-month Federal sentence, imposed last June, was widely criticized as too lenient. The sentence seemed not to meet public expectations of just punishment for a man whom Government and independent investigators accused of allowing helpless aged and ill patients to suffer poor care and living conditions.

Significantly, these abuses were not what Mr. Bergman was indicted for and pleaded guilty to. In the plea-bargaining process the prosecutor and lawyer for the accused negotiate the conditions and extent to which the accused will agree to admit guilt, and forego trial. A prosecutor may inform the judge of the accused person's "cooperation," but it is the judge who decides the sentence; he is not bound by the prosecutor's bargain.

For Mr. Bergman's guilty plea to Federal and state charges, the indictment of his son was dropped and the Bergmans granted immunity from further prosecution. In exchange, Mr. Bergman promised to repay the stolen Medicaid funds (the figure agreed to was $2.5 million) and to tell prosecutors what he knew about matters involving political influence.

Another term of the bargain, reached between Mr. Bergman and Federal and state prosecutors which is now in dispute, was that Mr. Bergman would receive no prison term other than the four-month Federal sentence. When State Supreme Court Justice Aloysius Melia imposed the added one-year term Mr. Bergman's lawyers said they would withdraw the guilty plea.

The vagaries of sentencing are well documented. Judges may focus on different aspects of a case and apply different weight to the same factors.

A prime example is that Federal Judge Marvin E. Frankel said that in his decision he considered Mr. Bergman's age (65), his reputation, his health, and the unlikelihood of recidivism. Judge Melia said Mr. Bergman's crime and his "shilly-shallying" over restitution showed him as a greedy, "unscrupulous and corrupt individual."

The Mirex in Lake Ontario

The New York State Department of Environmental Conservation has warned of the danger of Mirex, a toxic compound, in Lake Ontario. After stories in The New York Times brought widespread attention to the Mirex threat, the department announced last week it would cancel a salmon-stocking program in the lake, reconsider building a $10 million fish hatchery nearby and stop sports fisherman from keeping their catch.

Peter A. A. Berle, the state's Environmental Conservation Commissioner since May, called the contamination of the lake "an environmental tragedy of the first order." He said the department had not been as responsive as it should have been to the problem.

Asked why the department had not acted before the publicity, he said that in the past, information on fish and wildlife, the traditional realm of conservation officials, was not well integrated with data on chemicals affecting the environment, that the department had first to study research on Mirex, and, before it could act, get certification from the state Health Department of a public health danger.

City Schools Open, Uneasily

As are the suburbs, New York City is starting the school year with serious reductions in staff and services.

- There are 47,000 teachers for the system's 1.1 million pupils, 5,000 fewer than were employed last June and 15,000 fewer than the year before; classes will obviously be larger. In 1974, the school system tried to maintain a limit of 31 pupils in an elementary school class, 32 in junior high and 33 in high school. Last year most classes had three or four pupils more. This year classes of 40 and sometimes higher will not be uncommon.
- There will be fewer opportunities, in some cases none at all, for students to receive counseling, remedial help or to engage in afterschool activities, and a number of courses will be eliminated.

N.Y. Has Money Coming In

New York State is for the moment in the position of having to turn away people offering it money.

- The state's Housing Finance Agency, whose bonds just a year ago were unmarketable—bringing the state close to default—last week sold a $149 million issue quickly. It was a convincing sign that the state is recovering from its financial crisis. Orders of $100 million were turned back.

Why the switch in buyer attitudes? Primarily because of the state's success in putting the housing agency on a sound financial basis.

- The state's lottery, which was resumed two weeks ago after an 11-month suspension, is selling tickets faster than they can be printed. About 18 million of the $1 tickets were sold in the first week.

The popularity apparently arises because under the new lottery players learn immediately whether they are winners.

Between Elections, They Are Feeble and Dormant

Wakeup Time for N.Y. Parties

By FRANK LYNN

It's that time of year for the political parties in New York. Like Rip van Winkle, they awaken at primary and election time and stretch their flabby muscles, if any exist. After election day, it's back to sleep again.

The political parties, like many social and fraternal groups, are casualties of an era when government is the prime dispenser of social welfare, when cities are decaying and the middle class fleeing, when politics and politicians are held in even less than usual public esteem, when mayors and governors increasingly turn to civil service and outside professionals rather than party loyalists to fill key posts and when authority-and-discipline, the sine qua non for a political machine, is no longer unquestioned.

Last week's primary helped prove the point. City Council President Paul O'Dwyer was the Democratic state committee choice for the United States Senate nomination. Yet better than half the Democratic county organizations in the state refused to abide by that choice. Mr. O'Dwyer did have the support of the supposedly powerful New York City Democratic organizations, but it didn't do him much good. He did not win a single county in the state and only two of 67 Assembly Districts in the city.

Similarly, in the Republican primary, aides of Senator James L. Buckley had to activate their volunteer supporters to turn out the vote in counties where the Republican organiaztion workers yawned rather than worked.

These are not the only signs of decay. The Republican Party in New York City is virtually nonexistent except in some white, middle class areas. Almost all the county organizations of both major parties operate out of inelegant headquarters supported by the often small proceeds of an annual fund-raising dinner.

Many of the election district captains, the so-called front line soldiers of the organizations, have long since fled the city but keep up their ties with the organizations in the city to protect actual or prospective patronage opportunities.

There are exceptions—the affluent Nassau Republican organization headed by Joseph M. Margiotta and the Erie County Democratic organization under Joseph F. Crangle. Both combine strong leadership and old-fashioned loyalty, the chief characteristics of past political machines, with well financed modern computer technology.

Another indication of the decline of the parties is that fewer major candidates are the products of the organization or identify with it once they are nominated.

Daniel P. Moynihan, the Democratic senatorial candidate, came into government as a technician 22 years ago. His opponent, Senator James L. Buckley, was a wealthy businessman and idealogue. Both would undoubtedly sniff at a political clubhouse.

Party "bosses" are to be neither seen nor heard in public. If a candidate feels he must meet with one, it's over lunch or dinner at an out-of-the-way restaurant—something akin to an illicit liaison.

Only President Ford, of the major candidates, is relying on the party apparatus in New York. He had entrusted his preconvention strategy here to Vice President Rockefeller and company and has no alternative at this late date.

The New York Republican organization will have op tional responsibility for the Ford campaign here. Howe in the case of the Democratic Presidential campaign the Buckley and Moynihan campaigns, the candidates h established separate organizations.

The Carter campaign, following a Kennedy tradi reached out of state for its New York director, fin Gerard F. Doherty of Massachusetts. The theory is tha outsider has no New York enemies or argument to se Mr. Doherty will deal directly with the Atlanta high c mand of the Carter organization.

Both major parties may be weak but they are relati united at the moment. The divisions of Vietnam and "reform" versus "regular" battles of the 1960's have ceded in the Democratic Party. The state's Republi Party has been spared the national conservative-mode split because the Conservative Party in effect serves a safety valve for discontented conservatives.

The Conservative Party in the state began as a two-m operation, J. Daniel Mahoney and his brother-in-law Kie O'Doherty, and is still heavily influenced by the families.

The Liberal Party is essentially a one-man operation Alex Rose, the labor leader who has been a power in state for 40 years.

Like the Conservatives, most Liberal Party clubs ex on paper only while others could meet in a telephone boo Yet, both parties are satisfying an ideological need in electorate and thus can bargain with the major parties.

The two parties have enrollments of slightly better th 100,000 New Yorkers each but can attract up to 400,0 voters, particularly the Conservatives of late. That numb can easily be the difference between victory and defe for a major party candidate with or without the ma party endorsement and it certainly could be in the curre Presidential or senatorial election. Six years ago, Sena Buckley won 2.2 million votes on the Conservative li the party's high-water mark so far.

In contrast to the minor parties, the leadership of t major parties is more diffused.

Although Governor Carey as the state's leading Democ is in a position to rule the Democratic Party with his co mand of patronage and state contracts, he has not gott heavily involved in party in-fighting.

As a result, the leadership is spread among the Governo Mayor Beame; Mr. Crangle, who serves as a defacto upsta leader, and the city's Democratic leaders, each with the satraps and provincial interests.

The Republican Party traditionally is more tightly disc plined and Richard M. Rosenbaum, the Republican sta chairman and close ally of Mr. Rockefeller, has been t ing to fill the vacuum left by Mr. Rockefeller's depa from the state house.

Until now, the state Republican Party has been propp up periodically by the money of Mr. Rockefeller and friends. But even that hasn't been able to fend off th drowsy feeling once election day passes.

legislation survive this ortant, both sides mod- tions. The public in- who have been among chest supporters, re- ew of the more con- . For example, Linda Sierra Club no longer ed premarket testing icals, a provision that was anathema to the industry. For its part, the industry, convinced that some form of control would be passed, concentrated on winning the most favorable deal possible, ultimately supporting the weaker version passed by the House. To win this compromise, the industry lobbyists employed some favorite strategems such as estimates that the cost of the testing program would be as high as $2 billion. The General Accounting Office put the figure at $100 to $200 million.

There are a number of supporters of toxic substance control who question whether the legislation in its watered down form would have any meaningful impact. For one thing, the version adopted was closest to the House model in that it requires the agency to defend a delay in marketing a new chemical in court if the company objects. This, say Government officials familiar with such litigation, can use up even the most energetic department's resources.

Also, the budget of the Toxic Substance Control Office, already in operation, was limited to $10.1 million for the first year, and will be only moderately higher thereafter, which environmentalists considered far from adequate. The job of the office will be to review the notification forms for 500 to 1,500 newly developed chemicals each year, and decide which will need full testing. If the agency wants to ban a chemical, it may face expensive legal challenges. Moreover, the agency is similarly responsible for evaluating 30,000 substances already on the market.

In addition, a full test for cancer causing properties using animals takes about two and a half years, and whether the agency will have the political muscle to keep dozens of suspected hazards off the market during that lengthy period is questioned.

Those who believe the legislation and the funding are inadequate, cite the experience of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, which last year spent $109.8 million to protect workers from many of the same substances and has been unsuccessful, even its staunchest supporters agree, in controlling more than a handful of harmful chemicals.

It is believed that tests generally will expose hazardous chemicals. But, Glenn Schweitzer, director of the toxic substance office here, said, "It's unreasonable to think that some potentially harmful chemical won't slip through our net. We've always looked at this legislation as another tool to reduce the problem of incidents. There's no way to eliminate harmful chemical incidents."

In particular, Mr. Schweitzer is concerned that his office will necessarily have to concentrate on the most widely used substances, and he believes that the greatest hazards are in the little-used chemicals produced by smaller, less sophisticated companies.

Another concern, expressed by Dr. Samuel S. Epstein, a toxicologist at the University of Illinois who originally drafted the legislation in 1970, is that the data from the tests, which are to be conducted by the companies, can be misleading or even falsified. Dr. Epstein cites past cases, including a recent study by the Environmental Protection Agency that found that for 23 of the 24 most common pesticides, the companies' test data, when re-examined, proved inadequate in determining safety.

Dr. Epstein's active interest in the legislation is rare in the scientific community. Although there appears to be latent support among scientists for the bill, almost none have worked actively for it. (Scientists employed by the chemical industry, of course, have spoken only for their companies.)

"There's a general patina of indifference," Dr. Epstein said. "Periodically, I try to muster support. It's very, very difficult. Reaction of the scientific community to legislative matters is one of almost total indifference."

Supporters of stronger legislation believe that the current bill is better than no bill at all. "It's a start," said Janie Kinney, counsel to the Consumer Protection and Finance Subcommittee of the House Commerce Committee: "In three years, when this comes up for renewal, there'll be another chance."

According to legislative staff members, the bill has now passed its toughest hurdle—the conference committee—and now seems assured of easy passage. Some uncertainty over whether the President will sign it persists, but current public interest in toxic substances, combined with support from most of the chemical industry, makes a veto unlikely.

An Executive's Oversight

Anthony L. Conrad, president and chairman of the RCA Corporation, has resigned from both posts after admitting that he had not until recently filed personal income tax returns from 1971 to 1975. Mr. Conrad said that his tax problems were purely personal and were unrelated to company business. Mr. Conrad was named president last November in what was described as a revolt against Robert W. Sarnoff, the son of the company's founder, prompted by the company's declining profits. Under Mr. Conrad, profits had soared. However because of the sudden change in its executive leadership, RCA has had to withdraw a planned public offering of five million shares of common stock.

A Russian Test of Friendship

Overcoming bureaucratic obstacles and considerable physical difficulties, Andrei Sakharov, the dissident Soviet physicist, and his wife, Yelena Bonner, traveled more than 5,000 miles into the Siberian wilderness to visit Andrei N. Tverdokhlebov, banished there earlier this year for his public concern over Soviet political prisoners. Mr. Sakharov, who has a heart condition, and his wife have earned a reputation for traveling through Russia to support fellow dissidents, but this journey took on almost epic proportions. They waited 27 hours for tickets on a plane. No one would drive them the additional 27 miles to Mr. Tverdokhlebov's house; they walked. Police officials harassed them continuously; secret police agents had moved next door to Mr. Tverdokhlebov by the time they arrived. Nonetheless, the Sakharovs said, they enjoyed a good visit.

Rizzo Recall Petitions Validated

The validity of petitions demanding a recall election of Frank L. Rizzo, Mayor of Philadelphia, has been upheld by a city judge. Barring further court action, Mr. Rizzo faces a recall referendum in November. A Board of Elections in Philadelphia had invalidated enough of the signatures on the petitions to put the total number below the amount necessary for a recall vote. But the court ruled that the board, staffed by political friends of Mr. Rizzo, had used "incorrect," "arbitrary," and "unconscionable" methods to eliminate signatures. Among the names eliminated were those who abbreviated their first names and those who failed to list their middle initials.

F.B.I. Calls Off Dragnet

The Federal Bureau of Investigation's inquiry into the Socialist Workers Party has ended nearly 40 years after it began, apparently because the Government could no longer justify bureau surveillance of the party's activities under investigation guidelines it issued earlier this year.

The bureau has been unable to bring criminal charges against a single member of the party or its youth affiliate since 1940, when 18 members were convicted of violations of the Smith Act. The act was later declared unconstitutional. Over the years, party members have been under surveillance, wiretapped, burglarized and harassed by bureau agents and paid informers; at least 92 illegal entries were made at two party offices in New York between 1960 and 1966.

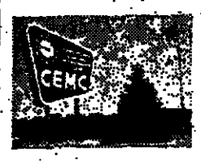
If we don't deal now with the energy problem in its entirety, we may soon be facing an even bigger problem—how to sustain our economy and our social structures when there's not enough energy to go around.

Cumberland Electric Membership Corporation is a rural electric cooperative which provides light and power for more than 37,000 farms, homes, businesses and industries in a five-county area of middle Tennessee. Cumberland averages 8.3 meters per mile of line; the national average for rural electric systems is four.



John R. Dolinger, manager of Cumberland EMC, Clarksville, Tenn., is president of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, through which America's rural electric systems formulate and espouse policies on national issues.

Nationwide, some 1000 consumer-owned, nonprofit rural electric cooperatives and public power districts serve 25 million consumers in 46 of the 50 states. They own and maintain nearly two million miles of line—42% of the nation's total.

We've said it before; we're saying it again. The longer we delay development of a comprehensive national program to ensure adequate energy for the future, the more unmanageable the problem becomes. The problem is multi-faceted, highly complicated.

The answers aren't all that easy to come by. But in every critical situation, there's a point where debate must give way to decision—and action. With energy, we think that point has been reached. In the weeks ahead, we're going to be speaking out on some of the tough decisions that must be made . . . pushing for commonsense, people-oriented approaches.

It is our responsibility to do so, as meaningfully and forcefully as we can.

Annually, delegates from each of the nation's rural electric systems meet to formulate policy. For a statement of their positions on energy, write to "Energy Policy", NRECA, 2000 Florida Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20009.

Evidence Grows On Danger To the Ozone

After weighing the available evidence on the role some spray cans may be playing in the depletion of the earth's ozone shield, a committee of the National Academy of Sciences has concluded that the threat is serious if not yet measurable and that Federal regulation is necessary no later than two years from now.

The committee's report, prepared at the request of Federal regulatory agencies, concurred with the theory that fluorocarbons are depleting the stratospheric layer that protects the planet from the sun's lethal ultraviolet rays, with potentially dangerous effects on health and climate. But it called the extent and pace of the depletion uncertain. The ozone layer begins 7 to 12 miles above the earth's surface and extends up to 30 miles; some molecules of the propellant gases rise rapidly but others, according to current estimates, take a century.

The committee therefore recommended that more measurements, of the ozone layer and of fluorocarbon drift be taken before a ban on fluorocarbon propellants is promulgated. The recommendation is based on the calculation that in two years ozone depletion by fluorocarbons will increase by no more than one-sixth of 1 percent. A number of companies have already substituted other atmospherically harmless propellants for fluorocarbons; an international program of ground, rocket, satellite and balloon observation is underway.

Women and the Priesthood

By adding to its canons a stipulation that requirements for ordination apply equally to women and men, the Episcopal Church has brought to an end a decade of formal debate on whether women can be members of the clergy. It is the last of the major American Protestant denominations to do so.

Some in the 2.9-million-member wing of the worldwide Anglican communion have maintained that permitting the ordination of women would be theologically unacceptable. The Episcopal Church, like the Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox, believes in Apostolic succession, the uninterrupted transmission of spiritual authority through a succession of bishops. Traditionalists recall that the Apostles were male.

In the debate at the church's legislative convention last week, those arguments were voiced again. So were those of members of the church, clerical and lay, who regard women's ordination as a matter of "simple justice." The divisions were reflected in the responses to a compromise proposal by the Presiding Bishop, John M. Allin, that women be ordained in dioceses that would accept them; they ranged from, "What I heard was 'separate but equal'" to "very realistic" to "I'd rather have it than nothing at all." That proposal was rejected as "mind-boggling" to implement; 2 years ago, 4 bishops had ordained 11 women, and were censured.

More Divisions Among Lutherans

The Rev. Rudolph P. F. Ressmeyer, a leading moderate in a prolonged doctrinal and political dispute in the Missouri Synod of the Lutheran Church, has formally resigned as president of the church's Atlantic District. The resignation, the third by a moderate among the denomination's equivalent of a bishop in less than a year, is yet another sign that there is de facto schism within the theologically conservative body.

The 2.8 million member synod, founded in 1847 by Saxon immigrants to the present state of Missouri seeking haven from the liberal rationalism that dominated religion in Europe, is the fifth largest, and one of the most traditional, of American Protestant churches. Its fundamental tenet is the absolute inerrancy of the Bible; ecclesiastically, central synod policies are binding.

The present controversy began in 1969, over an issue most Protestant churches settled a half century ago, the application of modern scholarship to the Bible. This year, the denomination's president refused to permit the ordination of graduates of a dissenting seminary, and officially ousted four district presidents, Pastor Ressmeyer among them, when they refused to obey his order.

Pastor Ressmeyer has said he will work with a new church, called the Association of Evangelical Lutheran Churches, to convince Missouri Synod parishes to defect.

Low Tar Better, No Smoking Best

New research has provided the first definitive evidence to support the belief that smoking cigarettes lower in tar-nicotine content is better for health than smoking higher tar-nicotine cigarettes. Not surprisingly, the research also supports prior evidence that not smoking at all is better still.

The findings are the result of an American Cancer Society survey of deaths and smoking patterns of 1,000,000 American men and women. The survey showed that 1,000,000 lung-cancer deaths were 26 percent lower among low tar-nicotine smokers than high, and that deaths from heart disease were 14 percent lower.

But deaths from all causes were still 30 to 75 percent higher among smokers of low tar-nicotine brands than among people who had never smoked regularly; people who smoked from one to two packs a day of low tar-nicotine cigarettes had a higher death rate than those who smoked less than a pack a day of high tar-nicotine cigarettes.

For the purposes of the study, low-tar-nicotine content was defined as fewer than 1.2 milligrams of nicotine and, with few exceptions, fewer than 17.6 milligrams of tar. No scientific analysis of the long-term effects of low tar-nicotine smoking had been possible previously because most low tar-nicotine brands have been relatively only recently marketed. A number of researchers had been concerned that low tar-nicotine smokers might increase their death rate because they would inhale more deeply, and take in more carbon monoxide and dioxide, and possibly, damaging "secret" additives.

Russia to Take Friends to Space

The Soviet Union has announced its next contribution to the internationalization of space travel will be the training of eight astronauts from its geopolitical satellites to join Russian fliers on manned missions starting in 1978.

So far, Soviets and Americans have been the only men to fly in space, and, with one notable exception, the Apollo-Soyuz mission 13 months ago, they have flown separately. Further joint missions have been discussed, but not planned. The United States space shuttle, scheduled to begin experimental service in 1979, and routine flights in and out of earth orbit in 1980, will carry Western European scientists, and, eventually, astronauts.

Since the sixties, both nations have cooperated with their allies on unmanned missions, flying scientific instrument packets and biological experiments for them. Last week, the Soviet Union launched two astronauts in a spacecraft that carried East German camera equipment. As Western European Communist parties have drifted, Russia has increasingly sought visible demonstrations of the benefits of Eastern Europe's ties with Moscow.

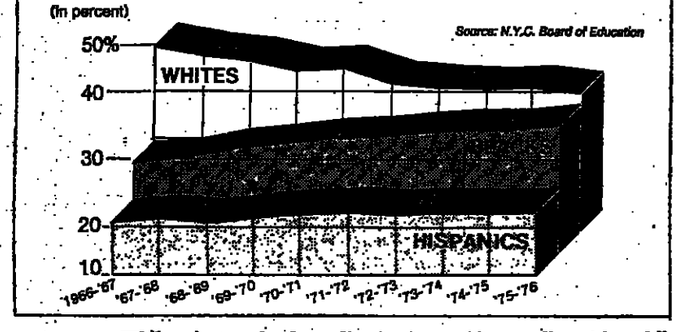
Minority Enrollment in New York City Public Schools

(In percent)

Source: N.Y.C. Board of Education



While private school enrollment rises, white enrollment in public schools is down; minority enrollment is up.

lies in which women have joined the labor force, and the apparent return to the city of some suburban families.

Another reason is parents' growing desire to have more say in their children's education, particularly on the "moral" side, and the feeling that lack of discipline and permissiveness are becoming pervasive in the public schools. A turnabout of the antireligious sentiment of the youth of the last decade is also judged to be a factor.

Race and class issues continue to contribute to enrollments in private schools. The resurging controversy over busing to end segregation, and the integration issue itself, made for an overwhelmingly white and middle-class enrollment.

Thus the demand for space in private schools has continued, despite tuition increases that make them as expensive as college. At Catholic parochial schools, enrollments, which had declined precipitously, seem to be stabilizing. And at Hebrew day schools, enrollments are so high across the nation that nearly two dozen new ones will open this year, about half of them in the New York City area.

Current estimates on private-school enrollment show 30,000 pupils attending more than 70 schools in the New York City area. (Nationwide, enrollment at private schools has grown 13.7 percent in the last six years according to one survey.) The schools of the Archdiocese of New York and the Brooklyn Diocese served 287,800 pupils last year. That figure may fall by 1 percent, compared with 3.3 percent the year before. New York City Hebrew day schools serve 54,000 pupils of the 92,000 estimated for the whole country.

Meanwhile, the crisis in public education is growing. The dropout and suspension rates are increasing. Needier students are facing cutbacks in key services and prospects for improvement are poor.

There have been profound sociological and ethnic changes, too. In 1960, slightly more than 10 percent of the pupils in the city school system were eligible to receive free lunches because they came from low-income families. Today, 51 percent are eligible.

In 1960, almost two-thirds of the city's public school pupils were white. Today two-thirds are black and Hispanic. Some observers like Bayard Rustin look askance at the "coincidence" of the system's new ethnic composition and the drastic cutbacks being made. On the other hand, many whites associate the decline of the public schools to ethnic change, a view that may tend to further weaken them.

Private schools play down the possible benefit they may get from troubles in the public school system. And educators disagree on the extent to which these difficulties and other cultural and sociological factors account for improving prospects in the private and parochial sectors.

That there is improvement is clear, and with it has come a perceptible change. Pupils that go against the traditional stereotype, some from families returning from the suburbs, are appearing. Non-Catholic, and often black and Hispanic pupils, are turning more frequently to parochial schools in search of a better education.

Both the private and parochial schools say they are seeing new kinds of parents, who are more active and academically demanding. Money means more to these less affluent families, as it does to those in which both parents work.

At the coeducational Dalton School, tuition this year is 8 percent higher than last year's, which ranged from $2,187 to $3,407 for some 1,250 students from nursery to high school.

Despite the cost, the headmaster, Gardner P. Dunnan, says, "Applications are much higher than in recent years. And one interesting trend is that 15 percent come from people who once lived in the city, moved to the suburbs, but are now moving back."

As to parochial schools, Monsignor James A. Feeney, the superintendent of schools for the Archdiocese of New York, which has 365 schools serving 150,000 pupils in Manhattan, the Bronx, Staten Island and seven upstate counties, says:

"Five years ago we had serious doubts as to whether we would survive. We feel now we have turned the corner on that."

His counterpart in Brooklyn and Queens, the Rev. Vincent D. Breen, says he is "very optimistic" because of growing parent involvement.

A spokesman for the National Society of Hebrew Day Schools, to which most of the 207 Jewish parochial schools in the New York City area are affiliated, said that the increasing popularity of ethnicity is one reason why those schools were expanding.

David Vidal writes about education for The New York Times.

What Do We Save By Hurting Paraprofessionals?

Some Cuts Are More Stupid Than Others

This school year, as last, the cuts inflicted on public education are hurting millions of people in the City of New York.

For the 1.1 million school children, the layoff of thousands of teachers this year, on top of more than 10,000 last year, means still higher class size. In one Manhattan high school this week, 44 students showed up every day for a Regents class in social studies. They sat on radiators and window ledges. The school and the class are not atypical.

The budget cuts also mean fewer course offerings. This year, in order to keep a job teaching French, a high school French teacher had to have more than 16 years' seniority. This means that the teaching of French is rapidly vanishing from our city schools. The same disappearance is true for other languages and other courses some people consider "non-essential"—art, music, physical education and a broad range of additional subjects.

The cutbacks mean a shortage of supplies and facilities—unused laboratories and libraries, gymnasiums and sports equipment, school newspaper offices and printshops.

For the parents of our school children, the budget cuts in education mean excruciating decisions—to stay in this city or to leave, to dip into funds set aside for college and pay tuition at private or parochial schools, to worry and suffer guilt that you may not be doing the best thing for your child. For hundreds of thousands of poor parents, of course, there is no decision that can be made—they are left with little but anguish.

For those most immediately and directly affected, the laid-off teachers, the cuts mean hardship and indignities never expected when they were encouraged to go into teaching for its professional rewards and, especially, for its job security. Whole groups of teachers and those who provide necessary supportive services have been wiped out or halved. Attendance teachers, guidance counselors, teachers of the homebound and other groups—including our youngest and newest teachers—have been hit extremely hard.

Few people will argue that the cuts in education were made with wisdom or foresight. At best, hasty, ill-conceived slashing was done under great pressure. At worst, cutting the schools was considered less of a political liability than cutting other services and producing uproar from greater numbers of New Yorkers than public school parents, students and teachers. But one set of cuts stands out as particularly stupid, because it saves practically nothing while destroying an important service, and because it mortgages the future to meet the budget exigencies of today. It illustrates more than anything else the self-defeating nature of New York's response to austerity.

Among those laid off by the Board of Education since last year are more than 3,000 school paraprofessionals, nearly a third of a corps of predominantly black and Hispanic women, most of whom had been plucked from lives of poverty and welfare. They were trained to perform an important service in the schools by assisting teachers. Today's paraprofessional leads small group instruction and provides individual help wherever possible in reading, math and phonics. She tutors, reads stories and acts as a trouble-shooter to identify classroom problems. In many instances, the para can communicate with parents she knows as a neighbor. When a teacher must be absent, the continued presence of a paraprofessional they know helps children accept the teacher covering the class—and is an enormous aid to the new teacher. There is a continuity of learning and authority.

Through the contract the UFT negotiated for paraprofessionals, their salaries and benefits were upgraded and they were helped to help themselves with a career ladder program of college study leading to bachelors' degrees and teaching jobs. Thousands were in college while working; a sizeable proportion had won their degrees and several hundred had actually become classroom teachers. For the first time, this group of people had meaningful work that filled a genuine public need—and real hope for the future.

Now, through a combination of layoffs, the budget cuts and the imposition of tuition at the City University, many hundreds are back on unemployment lines and welfare rolls, and the career ladder program is in immediate danger. Summer stipends—which have made it possible for many of the paras to continue their education over the summer—were denied this summer. The UFT has gone to arbitration on the stipends and expects to win them back. We will fight to retain all aspects of the career ladder program and uphold the para contract.

But just think how ridiculous these cutbacks are. Public funds go to pay paraprofessional salaries, which are not very high—the average is about $5,200—and to provide the opportunity for them to become teachers. With these public funds, we purchase the services of the paras in our schools—services teachers need to help them do an effective job. We provide a vehicle for integrating the public school staff now and, through the college program, in the future. We help to break the cycle of poverty and welfare. And, last but not least, we get back a portion of our investment in the taxes paid by these working paraprofessionals and teachers-to-be.

By laying off paras, by denying their stipends, by threatening the college program, we send thousands of people back on unemployment, welfare and Medicaid, now and possibly for years to come. The amount of public funds spent is virtually the same; it may even be more, considering that people on unemployment and welfare don't pay taxes. We are saving next to nothing. But we are denying children the services of the paras, we are pushing far into the future the genuine integration of our school staff and we are once again needlessly placing people on the treadmill of poverty and welfare.

The whole thing is irrational. It is a powerful example of how allegedly intelligent people can behave foolishly in a time of crisis—and hurt us all in the process.

Brandon Wilde, Age 7

This fall, the School of Visual Arts will be trying to give art students what Brandon Wilde already has.

The ability to see, to visualize spontaneously. To create with the unself-conscious imagination of childhood. But, because our students are much older than young Brandon, they bring with them the conditioning of a controlling world, a world that often diverts a natural talent from taking a natural course.

At the School of Visual Arts in both Day and Evening Programs, the process of becoming an artist is the focus of our curriculum. We understand what it requires, and believe in its possibility to produce personal, original work. We offer Degree and Non-Degree programs in Fine Arts, Media Arts, Photography and Film. Our highly professional faculty helps students to discover fresh ways of seeing while understanding the commercial world they must enter.

Schedules and catalogues for Day, Evening and Saturday Sessions are available now. Registration for the Fall Semester is in process now. Call, write, or come in and talk with one of our special counsellors about our Degree and Non-Degree programs for the development of artists.

Questions and a Yawn

President Ford last week officially launched his campaign for election with an address that limped haltingly to its anticlimax.

Having apparently concluded that nothing more was to be gained from that allegedly non-political, televised performance of "A President at Work," Mr. Ford's managers chose as the site of the opening event the University of Michigan, the President's alma mater and arena of his football exploits. The setting thus combined nostalgia with an emphasis on youth and the future.

If the formula fell short of achieving its intended goal, it was probably because Mr. Ford underestimated the audience's memory of his Presidential record, including the Nixon pardon and the list of vetoed bills. Mr. Ford's original scenario, sketched out with considerable imagination and force in his acceptance speech at Kansas City, had borrowed heavily from Harry Truman's successful run against Congress. Last week it became evident that the strategy of painting a picture of a do-nothing Congress is not easy to repeat under the shadow of a no-saying President.

"The question in this campaign of 1976," Mr. Ford said, "is not who has the better vision of America. The question is who will act to make that vision a reality." The most obvious deficiency in Mr. Ford's opener was precisely the lack of discernible evidence of any vision that might be turned into reality.

The President's most specific proposal was for legislation to aid "every American family that wants to own a home and is willing to work and save for it." To that end, Mr. Ford called for subsidies that would substantially reduce the required down payments on homes. But as was the case with his earlier promise to expand the nation's public parkland, the new proposal by candidate Ford seemed to ignore President Ford's negative action in the very area in which he now promised positive movement. Specifically, the President last year vetoed a measure to reduce home-buyers' mortgage rates, subsequently giving his approval only after Congress came back with a less generous subsidy.

The President was well within acceptable campaign decorum when he charged that Jimmy Carter, his Democratic opponent, was offering "smiles" rather than "specifics" and based his appeal too vaguely on a call for the voters' "trust."

The fact is that to date both candidates are equally vulnerable to this charge by Mr. Ford. The President has capitalized no less than Mr. Carter on the issue of personal trustworthiness. In the aftermath of Watergate, a pledge of integrity in the White House is, of course, an inevitable and proper ingredient in any candidate's campaign.

But trustworthiness, though crucial, is not enough. Personal integrity is more than ever the indispensable starting point; but it is no substitute for a candidate's obligation to spell out a program in pursuit of credible goals. So far, neither candidate has met that test. Each has assailed the other for being vague, and neither of the two can be faulted for this criticism of his opponent.

Mr. Carter has made some rather general pledges of balancing the Federal budget by 1981 with the use of some $60 billion he expects to flow from an improved economy. Mr. Ford, with comparable lack of specificity, has pledged the creation of 2.5 million new jobs each year, "affordable" health care and the preservation of peace through strength.

"In my Administration," Mr. Ford said at Ann Arbor, "the education needs of America's middle-income families will neither be forgotten nor forsaken." Against a record of a substantial recent drop in the proportion of college attendance among youths from middle-income homes, the question is relevant why the present Ford Administration has not even begun to do what the next Ford Administration promises to accomplish.

Taking note of recent polls which suggest that many disenchanted voters may stay home in November, Mr. Ford said that if the people are not excited by the candidates, "let them be excited about America." This misses the central point in the relationship between a self-governing people and candidates for high office. The voters' patriotism is not at issue; their love of America will be of little avail without the service of a leadership capable of charting a steady course.

Perhaps the Presidential debates will breathe life into the campaign. For the moment, the candidates are running a race that leaves the electorate with many questions and a yawn.

Reshuffle in Britain...

Although it has now been in power for more than 30 months, Britain's Labor party remains an uneasy coalition of left and moderate wings whose rival claims must be kept in delicate balance by any Prime Minister. James Gallaghan's Cabinet reshuffle on the occasion of the departure of Home Secretary Roy Jenkins was an example of that balancing act; but in spite of that it did bring promotions for some of Labor's abler moderates.

Two junior Ministers, Roy Hattersley and William Rodgers, were given long-overdue elevations to the Cabinet as Secretary for Prices and Consumer Protection and Secretary for Transport, respectively. Mrs. Shirley Williams, one of the finest talents to emerge since Labor's return to office in 1974, has been shifted from Prices and Consumer Protection to the more prestigious post of Secretary for Education and Science.

There was disappointment among Labor moderates that Mr. Callaghan did not assign the Home Office—one of the Big Three ministries—to Mrs. Williams, who at 46 is widely considered a potential Prime Minister. Instead, Mr. Callaghan rewarded another moderate, Merlyn Rees, who has spent more than two years in the frustrating job of Secretary for Northern Ireland. Defense Secretary Roy Mason was transferred to the Ulster post.

With Anthony Crosland remaining Foreign Secretary and Denis Healey continuing to direct Britain's drive for economic recovery and inflation control as Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Callaghan now has about as strong a team as his party's balancing requirements allow. Roy Jenkins will be sorely missed, though Britain's loss will be the European Community's gain when he becomes President of its Commission in Brussels next January.

Mr. Callaghan can take comfort from several recent developments: the overwhelming endorsement by the giant Trades Union Congress of its "social contract" with the Government on wage restraint; the T.U.C.'s strenuous effort to avert a strike by the Seamen's Union, which could wreck Britain's economic strategy; a narrowing of the foreign trade deficit for August, despite the continuing weakness of the pound; and figures showing fewer strikes in the first half of 1976 than in any like period since 1953.

The Government's problem abroad remains one of convincing financial and business circles that Britain can stay with the stern economic measures necessary to curb inflation and lay a sound foundation for recovery—and apply harsher controls if necessary to arrest the flight from sterling.

At home, the Government's political problems are those presented by Labor's unreconstructed left wing, which will mount savage attacks on Mr. Healey's economic policies and even demand a drastic nationalization of major banks at the party conference later this month. If Mr. Callaghan can turn back those challenges, not only the Prime Minister but Britain's friends and allies will begin to breathe more easily.

...Renewal in Canada

Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau has carried out an unusually sweeping Cabinet revision in Canada for the most obvious of reasons: A poll shows his Liberal Party commanding support from only 29 percent of the electorate—its lowest standing since 1958 and 18 points behind his Progressive-Conservative opposition.

In his effort to provide a new look for a Liberal administration in power for thirteen years—the last eight under his premiership—Mr. Trudeau named seven new ministers whose average age is only 41 and who include two women and the first Indian to achieve Cabinet rank in Canada. Three veterans were retired and nine holdovers moved to different ministries.

One major surprise, but also a reflection of the Cabinet's difficulties in Parliament, was the return of Allan J. MacEachen to his former job as Government leader in the House of Commons. Mr. MacEachen was reluctant to leave the Foreign Ministry after only two years, during which he substantially expanded Canada's ties with developing countries; but he was needed in Commons to replace the veteran Mitchell Sharp, who has retired.

The Government's unpopularity derives in large part from problems afflicting many countries: a sagging economy, inflation, high unemployment. But aggravating factors include dissension in Liberal ranks. John Turner, often mentioned as Mr. Trudeau's successor, quit abruptly as Finance Minister a year ago. This year brought the resignations, amid controversy, of two ministers from Quebec. Mr. Trudeau was savagely criticized for circumstances that barred Taiwan from the Montreal Olympic Games.

Mr. Trudeau does not have to face the voters until 1979, so there is time for a turnaround in the economy and in his Government's fortunes. But he has never before had to come back from such a low point; and this time he faces a confident Conservative Party under the vigorous new leadership of 37-year-old Joseph Clark. The only certainty is that the next three years will be lively ones on Canada's political fronts.

Sumac Fire

Some say that sumac's color signals the autumnal equinox, though they cannot readily explain why an occasional branch or even a whole clump turns color in late August. In any case, by now most of the sumacs at the roadside and in the corner of the back pasture begin to look like Sioux war bonnets and are ready to lead the parade right into Indian summer. They are full of the most brilliant reds one will see until the maples take over.

Sumac is native to almost every area of the world except the polar regions, and the name comes almost unchanged from the Arabic down through Old French. The wild species are outcasts in most places, but in earlier times people found many uses for them, in tanning, in dyeing, in cabinet work, as condiments, as a varnish base, even as an oil for candles. And everywhere the birds continue to feast on the generous seed heads of the common staghorn sumac. There is a poisonous species, whose leaves are as dangerous to the unwary as those of poison ivy; but it is rare in our area. Its leaves too are compound, but they are short and rounded, not long and feathery.

Sumac is stubborn and persistent. Give it an inch at the edge of a pasture or along a back road and it will take the proverbial mile. But it does have its own beauty, particularly when autumn turns the equinoctial corner. Crimson is its basic color, but it also achieves a fine, clean yellow, a rich orange and, at times, a splendid purple. One wonders why the legend-makers never gave it credit for lighting the autumn flame in the forest, setting off the whole blaze of color. Legendary or not, there it stands now, full of cool autumn fire, ready to set the whole woodland aflame.

Letters to the Editor

S.1: 'Old Monster in New Clothes'

To the Editor:

Any complacent view that S. 1, the mammoth bill to "codify" the Federal criminal code, is permanently dead is unwarranted. It now appears that early in the next Congress, Senator Kennedy and other liberal Senators will cosponsor a substitute bill with a new number, supposedly "clean" and entitled to bipartisan support and early passage.

Analysis of the 35 or so changes which will be made in the 800-page S. 1 discloses that although the changes move in the right direction they simply do not go far enough.

Many of the horrors which have aroused widespread public anxiety about the repressive features of S. 1 will remain intact, or only slightly changed. It should be noted that a more liberal bill, H.R. 12504, introduced in the House by Representatives Kastenmeier, Mikva and Don Edwards, made more than a thousand changes in S. 1 and that even then some repressive provisions slipped through.

Analysis of the revised S. 1 is possible even before it emerges from the committee process in view of the announcements as to the areas under discussion for compromise. That analysis discloses that many changes are merely cosmetic; others are limited.

For example, the Official Secrets Act provisions which have aroused much alarm will be deleted. However, Section 1301, Obstructing a Government Function by Fraud, will continue. This is a back-up to the Official Secrets Act provision incorporating into statutory law what the Federal prosecutors sought unsuccessfully to achieve by the Ellsberg-Russo indictments.

Labor will be confronted with a partial overriding of United States v. Enmons, 410 U.S. 396 (1973). Enmons declined to hold the Federal extortion statute applicable to violence in a legitimate labor dispute. The revised S. 1 will apply the Hobbs Act (extortion) provisions to violence in a labor dispute, except for incidental violence which arises out of picketing.

The revised S. 1 will permit the President to declare a national defense emergency upon real or threatened "disturbance of the international relations of the United States" (Angola? South Africa? Korea? Spain?)

If anything, the country is in a more dangerous posture of having its basic freedoms taken away than when S. 1 was an obvious target. The country must be sufficiently sophisticated to spot the old monster, S. 1, in its new party clothes. The revised S. 1 should be returned to committee to be redrafted in the spirit of the Bill of Rights.

To Defuse a Bomb

To the Editor:

The bomb squad procedure in tending to the Croatian radicals' explosive is not only sad but also beyond reasonable expectations were one asked to define courage.

But is there to be a revised police procedure for de-activating madmen's bombs? Certainly, technology can provide a procedure more certain than walking up to an apparently defused bomb only to have it explode. While the rest of the bizarre highjacking incident was virtually out of police control, the defusing procedure ought not to have been. That is a hard thing to say, especially since the lack of control resulted in the loss of a man.

To the Editor:

The recent hijacking of a T.W.A. New York-to-Chicago flight by Croatian nationalist terrorists should succeed in outraging a very broad spectrum of our American people. Here is a crime that not only endangered the lives of passengers and crew but cost the life of Police Officer Murray, who attempted to defuse the terrorists' bomb here on the ground.

Perhaps the impact of this will raise an outcry equal to that heard last when another kidnapping involving an American pilot occurred and inflamed the passion of people everywhere. The Lindberg child kidnapping, just fifty years ago, inspired the law with teeth, and such crimes were reduced.

I believe a mandatory death sentence for hijackers of airliners must be instituted soon, with concurrent worldwide moves toward the outlawing of terrorist acts of all kinds.

Now is the time to begin such a move.

Abortion: A Political Issue

To the Editor:

Jimmy Carter's position on abortion is politically right. Abortion is wrong in principle, as war is wrong, and capital punishment. The church has the right and duty to witness against abortion, war and capital punishment: that killing is wrong.

However, the issue as to whether abortion should be regulated by constitutional amendment — instead of state law, for example — is a political issue. The church-state issue is involved when the church seeks to dictate the political means for accomplishing a moral objective.

If the polls are correct, and a majority of Catholics disagree with the Catholic hierarchy on abortion, then the first task of the church is moral education of Catholics, before it seeks to dictate political means for enforcing Catholic morality on a non-Catholic political candidate.

And why aren't the "sacredness of life" people calling for a constitutional amendment against war?

Of Religion and the Presidency

To the Editor:

Thomas P. Slavens (letter Sept. 12) argues that Jimmy Carter's brand of Christianity should not be disturbing because it is really "in the main line of the Christian tradition." Assuming that a tradition with as long and complex a history as Christianity has one main line, this argument is still not sufficient for some of us who have winced a little at Mr. Carter's description of himself, just as we have winced when his opponent was nominated amid a marathon chorus of "God Bless America."

Mr. Slavens likens Mr. Carter to every American President, "with the possible exception of Lincoln, who never joined a church but who was, of course, a committed Christian." That "of course" is just a bit smug, as if to say, "Now who could possibly dream of a good President who wasn't a good Christian!" Andrew Johnson and Rutherford Hayes also never joined a church. Neither did Thomas Jefferson. The author of our Declaration of Independence was, in fact, a closet agnostic and did not originally want to write "endowed by their Creator."

If Mr. Slavens can be too confident of Christianity's scope, so perhaps can Mr. Carter. No one of sound mind believes Mr. Carter would be knowingly hostile or cruel to non-Christians, but could he make a bad decision as President simply out of a lack of awareness? There is a climate for such mistakes. Even the none-too-evangelical New Jersey State Legislature is considering two — yes, two — bills to reinstitute "nonsectarian" prayer in the public schools. This is hardly a persecution, but it is still an unfair demand on those few who do not wish to pray or meditate in school.

The point is that the great totality of America is broader than the main line of Christianity. We have an important and sizable minority of non-Christians, encompassing the most orthodox of Jews and the most unorthodox of atheists, which is not only a part of the American people but a part which has made many valuable contributions. The President owes them the same loyalty he owes everyone else.

On Wind Power

To the Editor:

Mr. Inglis's letter of Sept. 5 ra two points which should be challeng First, with regard to the Ameri Physical Society's "seriously critic review of the Rasmussen Report, neglects to mention that the A.P.S. view was concerned with the d report issued in 1974. The final rep issued in 1975, factored in the A. comments in revised calculations e though there were no substan changes in the 1974 conclusions. Mo over, the A.P.S. report, admittedly c ical though constructive, stated: the course of this study, we have uncovered reasons for substan short-range concern regarding risk accidents in light-water reactors."

Second, Mr. Inglis' infatuation w wind power is not justified by facts. Even ardent proponents of w power are dubious of the econon of wind turbine generators, the p jected costs of which are far in exc of current utility costs for coal or clear power plants. (Of course, t cost increases have only a nomi impact on the cost of electricity fr fission.) Further, the number of wi mills needed to replace the electric otherwise generated by oil and u nium would be staggering and c tainly seen by more than a "few p ple." How would Mr. Inglis prop that the power generated in a rem area be transmitted to where it needed and remain unseen?

IRA CHAI

To the Editor:

Prof. David R. Inglis's Sept. 5 let recommended more Federal supp for use of the wind as a source energy and pointed out that rising f prices will make this more attract economically.

Part of the explanation for our G ernment's relative indifference to wind may be that it is considered minor category of solar energy. Mc efforts are being made to utilize so heat than to catch the wind that creates. Yet men have used mechan cal energy drawn directly from th wind for centuries profitably in man ways.

Both windmills and wind-driven ge erators of electricity are now w developed devices. They can be beau ful machines that will not increa pollution of the air, land or water, a we could use more of them imme ately. F.B.I.: Undeserved Slur

To the Editor:

Campaigning Gov. Jimmy Carte has obviously been grossly misled b vicious distortions frequently aired i the news media about the F.B.I. an carried away by his own campaig oratory.

His reported public assertion a Brooklyn College Sept. 7 that th record of the F.B.I. was a "disgrace" when it "ought to be purer than Cae sar's wife" was an unwarranted blanke insult to countless dedicated Ameri cans undeserving the slur.

For this heedless slander, Mr. Carte owes a prompt apology to thousand of present and former F.B.I. employee who have made up the complement o the personnel of an agency that ha established a record for excellenc and integrity that would be hard t match anywhere. These unnamed countless thousands can match integ rity with Mr. Carter or anyone he can drag out, either from his state of Georgia, any organization he has ever been associated with or anyone from anywhere, including Caesar's wife.

With all their advance ballyhoo, headlined in the news media, zealous probers, digging for months to come up with positive evidence of the "per vasive internal corruption" they were billed as investigating, have been glaringly unable to produce as prom ised, and to pretend that they did is a fraud. The Myth of Busing: Some Contradictory Evidence

IN THE NATION

By Tom Wicker

On August 2, 1971, Richard Nixon disavowed, with a bitter anti-busing statement, a plan put forward by his own Department of Health, Education and Welfare for the desegregation of schools in Austin, Texas. The next day, in little-noticed testimony, Dr. David H. Porter described to a Congressional committee how busing had been used to end segregation in the schools of Harrisburg, Pa., in 1970.

Was it working? Senators asked Dr. Porter, the Harrisburg school superintendent. He thought so, Dr. Porter said, but four years of "statistically accurate comparisons" would be required to show it.

Five years later, Gerald Ford, sounding much like his predecessor in 1971, proposed anti-busing legislation; earlier, his Administration was disclosed to have been debating whether to ask the Supreme Court to reconsider its previous decisions upholding busing as a proper tool of desegregation. These moves owed much to the raucous busing dispute in Boston and to election-year politics; but what about the actual experience of communities like Harrisburg?

Just before desegregation began, the population of that city was 58 percent black, but five of its elementary schools were 88 to 99 percent black. Desegregation by busing, under orders from the Pennsylvania Human Rights Commission, made these five schools only 56 to 64 percent black. Now, Harrisburg has six elementary schools, all from 59 to 74 percent black, and five Early Childhood Centers, all from 55 to 69 percent black. Since blacks are 69 percent of total enrollment, desegregation has clearly been achieved.

Dr. Benjamin F. Turner, now the superintendent, reports that reading test scores—contrary to what popular opinion would predict—have improved during the same six-year period. Children in the first three grades this year not only began their education in a desegregated system, but took part in a kindergarten program; they are reading at substantially higher levels than were children who were in the same grades in the segregated schools of 1969. Third graders in that year, for example, read at levels ranging from 2.6 to 3.9, against a national mean of 3.1 on the Stanford Achievement Test; third graders today are reading at levels of 3.5 to 4.2, compared to a national mean of 3.8.

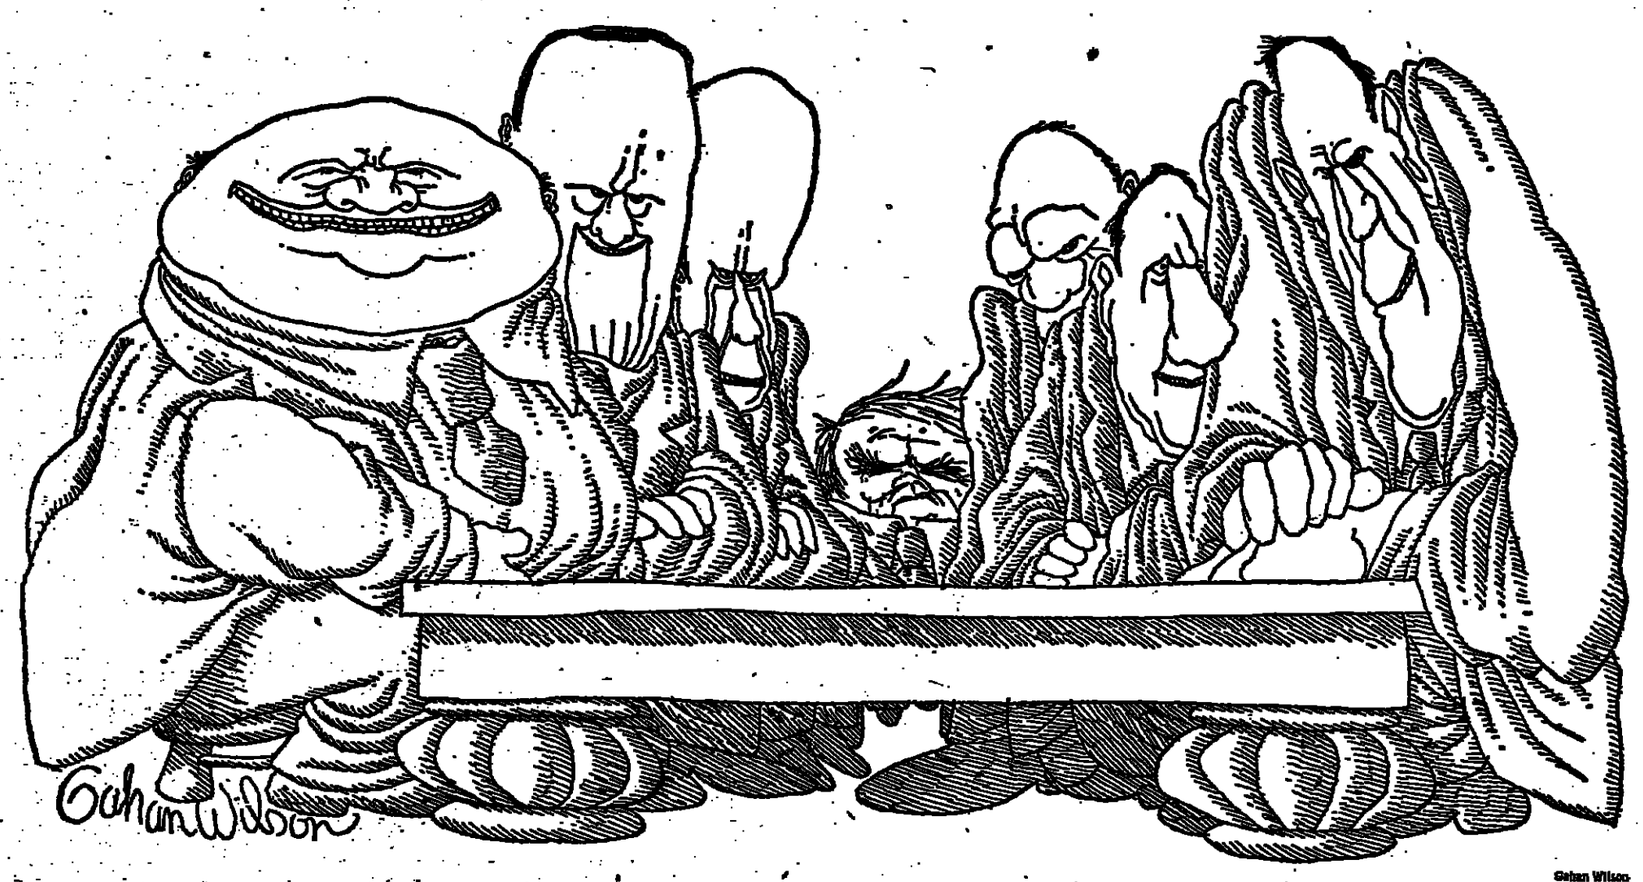
Children in higher grades, who did not attend kindergarten, are not showing as much improvement, but are still bettering the test scores of 1969. Mr. Turner gives much credit for the improvement to the Early Childhood Centers and to special reading coordinators made possible by a $1 million grant under the Emergency School Aid Act—a grant three times renewed.

As for the general supposition that desegregation causes "white flight," you can't quite prove it by Harrisburg. The white student population of the city has declined by more than 4,000 in the last decade—but 43 percent of the loss came before desegregation in 1970. Only 12 percent of the decline took place in the first two years of desegregation. A major loss—32 percent of the total—occurred in 1972-73, after Harrisburg was hit by tropical storm Agnes and the Susquehanna River floods. But the loss of white students dropped back to 13 percent in the 1974-75 school years. So "white flight" began before desegregation, showed no surge after desegregation, and was most aggravated by natural disaster.

These results from Harrisburg square exactly with the Federal Civil Rights Commission's recent report that 82 per cent of school districts that have desegregated—Boston to the contrary—tion and with little variation in "white flight" between districts that desegregated and those that didn't (except that districts that were more than 40 percent black to begin with suffered higher losses of white students following desegregation). The Commission contended plansibly that desegregation could not be held wholly or even primarily responsible for a white exodus from the cities that has been going on since World War II.

Cooperative community leadership has resulted, according to the commission, in succesful desegregation in numerous districts—for example, Dallas and Milwaukee. Opposition seems to be expiring in Louisville. But four of every ten black and three of every ten Hispanic students still attended segregated schools in 1974. Schools in New York, Los Angeles and Chicago, the nation's largest cities, are still effectively segregated. And only 7 percent of public school children are being bused to achieve desegregation—although half of American school children ride buses to school.

Dismay Over the Way New York City Has Been Run



Gahan Wilson

By Joel Harnett

New York is a tale of two cities: One is poor, violent, sustained by welfare; the other is work-oriented and job-creating.

Between them stands a bureaucracy, itself almost as large as a major city, ostensibly mediating between the two, taxing one in the name of the other. But, in fact, the bureaucracy has commandeered the rhetoric of the liberal, the sympathy of the well-intentioned and the tax money of the citizen. And what has it done with it? It has fattened itself.

We know now, of course, that we've been had. Our officials have committed a special kind of fraud by borrowing against uncollectible revenues and projecting us to the brink of bankruptcy where we must bail them out. We are all to blame, they say.

This is arrant nonsense. They have lied to us; they have been elected under false pretenses; they have wasted billions by administrative disasters; they have produced no factual base to judge their performance; their behavior to this day is modified in deference to their need for help.

Today massive firings have not produced a lower budget, in large part because employees have gone on pension and many of the rest got raises. Our expense deficit still runs over a billion dollars. And, while the Federal Government may prolong the city's flight to bankruptcy, it cannot reverse the failing fortunes of our city's economy.

The key determinant of this city's budget is the politics of the municipal labor unions. Yet the public does not elect these leaders. On the contrary, it is they, in partnership with the political system, who do the electing.

The single most crucial reason for the death of New York is the fact that city must be competitive to other places to survive. Yet this idea is still misunderstood by those officials who bleat about our neighbors' stealing our businesses or the Feds bailing us out. Changes in national policy, such as the federalization of welfare, can help, but only New York can ultimately bail out

'The city has marched to a different drummer from the rest of the nation. Nor is it they who are out of step.'

most critical decisions about the future of the city are made to preserve this alliance . . . the public be damned.

If the municipal hospital workers really felt staff shortages affect the health of our citizens, the last thing in the world they would do is strike. Nor would teachers, hypocritically raving about salvaging schools, settle a contract by giving our children the shortest school day in the country.

Despite repeated danger signals, this city's administration ignored the obvious fact that the cost of government must be related to the state of the local economy. Otherwise, taxes rise and people and business leave. A New York as a city worth living in.

For this we need a plan to restore our competitive status. But, as of now, there is no visible plan, no set of priorities and no structure for implementing them. After all, this city is the size of a country but it has been operated like a candy store (and that is an insult to candy-store operators).

When the Feds want to grease the economy they lower, not raise taxes. The city collects $600 million annually in income taxes. If we cut this, we infuse money into our local economy. Our retail sales are badly slumping compared to the national experience, yet we raise sales taxes. Common sense dictates cutting sales taxes to stimulate local sales and to create jobs. If we had leadership, there would be a city-directed policy for transportation, education, energy and clear-cut accountability for performance.

The policies we do have drive away the affluent, the people who create jobs, by confiscatory taxes on their businesses and their incomes. Their tax money does not convert to effective municipal services. Why work your heart out for the greater gratification of Albert Shanker, who lives in Putnam County?

The city has marched to a different drummer than the rest of the nation. Nor is it they who are out of step. Our national economy is competitive and relatively prosperous while this city languishes. Talk all you want about the plight of the cities. San Francisco had the courage to take its stand. Dozens of the newer metro centers hold up New York as a model of what to avoid. Across the country state and local governments have swung into the black and are piling up surpluses.

New York is not a poor city. It will survive, even flourish, if the asset base is here—if there is a total change. And that must come about in the November 1977 elections.

This city has faced bankruptcy before. And citizens and business groups have joined forces to wrest control from the incompetent and the corrupt. Ever since a committee of 70 swept up the mess left by Boss Tweed, civic groups have taken the initiative for change. In LaGuardia's day, it was fusion. Now something new is needed.

We need to forge a force from the politically-inert majority—people from businesses, small and large; technicians, artisans, professionals—all those whose effort, discipline and creativity have brought vitality, knowledge and achievement to this city; from all these who love this city and want to stay.

They now know that their city government is destroying the conditions that make achievements possible. They will not be politically inert any longer.

This is their city, and they will not return it to a self-serving bureaucracy who knows it will survive, indeed grow in power, as the city dies.

Joel Harnett is chairman of the City Club of New York. This is excerpted from a speech he gave there.

Will the Debates Really Matter?

By William V. Shannon

WASHINGTON—There is a recurring tendency on the part of the press and the public to view a Presidential campaign as a cross between a beauty contest and a tennis match. It is like a beauty contest in that the candidates are judged on their physical endowments such as their smiles, their profiles and their hair; and like a tennis match because they are judged on their acquired skills such as speech-making and news conference technique.

Occasionally, there are extremely close contests in which those marginal factors are decisive. But most national elections turn on much more impersonal and predictable considerations—the issues, the records of the two candidates, the self-interest of the voters, the relative strength of the two parties. These are the fundamental formative influences in a campaign.

In this election, these basic influences are working in favor of Jimmy Carter and the Democrats. That is not to say that his victory on Nov. 2 is assured. Nothing in life is certain. It is possible to imagine scenarios in which Mr. Carter will lose. But it is much more probable that he will win a solid victory in the popular vote and achieve an Electoral College landslide.

This probability rests, first of all, on this year's issues. Economic matters including unemployment, inflation, job uncertainties, taxes and health insurance are uppermost in voters' minds this year. None of these issues work to Mr. Ford's advantage.

Nearly one family in every three has had one of its members out of work at some time in the last three years. The unemployment rate nationally is close to 8 percent and considerably higher in many of the older industrial cities of the East and Middle West where Mr. Ford would have to do well in order to win. Many workers who have kept their jobs feel insecure, while many in the middle classes have had their standard of living eroded by inflation.

Nor is the public outlook about the economy favorable to Mr. Ford. The latest New York Times/CBS survey of public opinion taken in early September showed that nearly three-quarters of the voters believe that the economy is getting worse or not improving. Whether or not this pessimism is justified by objective facts, it is a powerful drag on the Ford campaign.

When voters are deciding on economic issues, they are voting their perceived self-interest. There are times when other issues override pocketbook concerns. But unlike the two previous campaigns, this year the so-called "social issues"—crime, race relations, drugs, youthful rebelliousness — are unimportant.

The best issue for an incumbent is foreign affairs. It is the one domain about which he presumably has special, inside information and over which he can exert most control. But this year, foreign policy is a critical issue only with Reaganite Republicans, disaffected with Mr. Ford.

Moreover, despite the efforts of his staff to hurry him off on overseas missions and make him look "Presidential," Mr. Ford is not viewed by the public as a strong leader in foreign affairs.

Mr. Ford's failure to establish his personal mastery as President is the major political fact about his record. Although he is the White House incumbent and his opponent is an ex-governor new to the national scene, there is not the wide discrepancy that would normally exist between the two men in terms of public confidence and a sense of authority. Insofar as Watergate, the Nixon pardon, and an anti-Washington mood are electoral factors, Mr. Carter as an outsider probably has the edge.

Finally, there is the relative strength of the two parties. In The Times/CBS survey, 39 percent of voters identified themselves as Democrats and 21 percent as Republicans. When self-described independents were pressed to say which party they usually voted for, the gap widened even further with the Democratic percentage rising to 52 percent and the Republicans to 20 percent.

Richard Nixon closed this gap because he had both the foreign policy issue and the "social issues" working in his favor. Dwight Eisenhower overcame it because of his enormous personal prestige. Without foreign policy or the social issues or personal authority to help him, Mr. Ford has an extraordinarily difficult task.

It is possible to imagine Mr. Ford doing so brilliantly and Mr. Carter so dismally in the debates that these probabilities may be turned upside down. But what is there in the career of Mr. Carter, so intelligent, so articulate, so self-disciplined, that suggests he will ruin himself in debate?

The debates are more likely to confirm the electorate's basic tendencies than to alter them dramatically. Television enhances a preoccupation with superficial matters like Mr. Carter's toothy smile and Mr. Ford's wooden speechmaking. Such attributes decide beauty contests and athletic contests. They do not decide a Presidential election when the basic political forces

The Battle Ribbons of Common Cause.

THE 5-YEAR BATTLE TO TAKE BIG MONEY OUT OF POLITICS.

THE BATTLE TO LET CITIZENS SEE WHAT'S GOING ON IN THEIR OWN GOVERNMENT.

THE BATTLE TO GET THE VOTE FOR 18-YEAR-OLDS.

THE BATTLE TO CUT OFF FUNDS FOR THE WAR IN VIETNAM.

THE BATTLE TO CLOSE THE OIL-DEPLETION TAX LOOPHOLE.

THE BATTLE TO BREAK THE TYRANNICAL SENIORITY SYSTEM IN CONGRESS.

THE BATTLE TO POLICE CONGRESSIONAL ETHICS.

THE BATTLE AGAINST CORRUPTION & BACKROOM POLITICS IN THE STATE LEGISLATURES.

I don't think it would be an exaggeration to say that some of the most promising developments that have taken place in the country lately would not have taken place if it weren't for the battles fought—and won—by the 260,000 members of Common Cause and their allies.

Let me be specific.

In the past five years, we have seen astonishing reforms in the way that election campaigns in this country are paid for. At this very moment, we are witnessing the first American presidential campaign in which there are no fat cats—no big money contributors to whom the winning candidate would be obligated.

This historic change in our system was brought about substantially through the efforts of Common Cause.

The law suit that made waves.

In the last two years, 55 corporations or corporate heads have been convicted or indicted for illegal contributions. The first of these scandalous revelations concerned political campaign gifts here at home. Later revelations involved bribes to secure arms sales abroad—bribes in some cases so huge and controversial as to produce major political scandals in the countries involved (e.g., Japan, Italy). All the revelations, from first to last, were consequences in one way or another of a single law suit brought by Common Cause against the Committee to Re-elect President Nixon.

And Common Cause, working closely with forward-looking members of Congress, has played a key role in a burst of Congressional reform such as this country has not seen since the early years of this century—including the dismantling of the tyrannical seniority system and the deposing of some of the most autocratic chairmen, as well as the opening up of most of the hitherto-secret bill-drafting sessions of Congressional committees.

When we came into being six years ago, our rallying cry was, "Everybody's organized but the people." Today, as a result of the spadework that Common Cause members and others have done, the public interest is being more vigorously defended and our system of government is beginning to work again. Bit by creaking bit, the apparatus is becoming more responsive to the citizen-taxpayer.

If those battle ribbons were actually issued, our members would be entitled to wear them with pride. (It doesn't mean, though, that we fought the battles single-handedly!)

A lot of Americans don't even know we exist—but in the halls of Congress and the state legislatures, they know we exist—and they view us with a mixture of respect, antagonism and apprehension. A lot of the politicians don't like "mere citizens" to be interfering in their work. But they respect the extraordinary capacity of our members to stir up grassroots pressure.

Who are we?

All kinds of people. Democrats, Republicans, Independents are represented, not only in every state but in every Congressional District in the nation.

Our members aren't cut to a pattern. They think for themselves. You can get an argument from them on almost any subject. What they agree on is that they want our system to work. And they're willing to fight the battles to make it work.

Where does our money come from?

It comes mostly in little checks from a lot of people for dues ($15.00 a year) plus gifts of $100 or less. This accounts for 94% of our income. In other words, we have a broad financial base resting squarely on our members. If the actions of Common Cause didn't please the members, we'd soon be out of business. And that's healthy.

What do we do with the money? We fight battles. We have fought literally hundreds of battles in Congress, in the courts and in the state legislatures. And we've won most of them. That is a matter of record.

What are the battles ahead?

Beyond comparison, the biggest battle is to take Congress off the auction block by establishing the public financing of Congressional campaigns. It isn't often that one gets the chance to make history, but a victory here will be authentically historic. And the fight will be rough. The flood of special-interest money pouring into Congressional campaigns is without precedent.

Other issues will be selected by our membership through the Governing Board they elect, and through the yearly referendum by which they decide on the issues to be given priority.

Incidentally, Common Cause members discover that being active citizens is not only good for the political system, it's good for them as individuals. They learn how our political system really works. They become more effective. Most important the by participating they regain the feeling that Am is their venture. It's a good feeling.

Shouldn't you be among us?

Look what we have accomplished in a few years with 260,000 members. Can you imagine we could do for our country if we were 50 strong?

Seaver Halts Pirates Again, 6-2, As Phils Extend Lead to Four

By THOMAS ROGERS

After the Mets inflicted a pair of stinging defeats on the Pirates on Monday and Tuesday nights in Pittsburgh, it seemed reasonable to assume that the Pirates' astounding late-season run at the Philadelphia Phillies had been checked.

The Pirates trailed the Phillies, the National League's Eastern Division leaders, by six games and had only 19 to play.

But, just four days later, the Pirates were only three gams behind Philadelphia as they faced Tom Seaver and the Mets yesterday afternoon at Shea Stadium. Larry Demery, who lost to Seaver on Monday night, took the mound for Pittsburgh.

Seaver, backed by a nine-hit attack that included home runs by Dave Kingman and Ed Kranepool, defeated the Pirates for the second time in six days. He allowed only five hits in a 6-2 triumph that dropped the Pirates four games behind the Phlies, who beat the Cubs in Chicago, 4-1. The triumph was Seaver's 14ht against 10 defeats this season and his fourht staright.

Rebounding from the two losses to the Mets in Pittsburgh, the Pirates had swept a two-game set from the Phillies and then topped the Mets on Friday nights in the opener of a four-game series. On Friday afternoon, the Phils suffered their 18th loss in 23 games, to the Cubs in Chicago, to hearten Pirate fans.

The Pirates, who trailed Philadelphia by 14½ games on Aug. 24, had taken 18 of 22 contests to lop 11½ games off the Philadelphia advantage.

Seaver, winning for the third straight time, accounted for one of Pittsburgh's rare losses with a five-hit shutout on Monday. In that game, he struck out 12 Pirates to run his league-leading total to 221. He also lowered his earned-run average to 2.40, the best among the league's starting pitchers. But, strangely, he had only a 13-10 won-lost record to show for his efforts.

Any thoughts of a second straight shutout for Seaver disappeared in the second inning yesterday. With one out, Dave Parker smashed a grounder that hopped past Ed Kranepool at first base for a triple. Richie Hebner then lifted a sacrifice fly to Lee Mazzilli in deep center field. Rennie Stennett cracked a single into left, but he was cut down attempting to take second on a fine peg from Bruce Boisclair to Felix Millan.

Dave Kingman tied the score with one swing of his bat in the Met second. He blasted his 35th homer, over the left-field fence, tying Philadelphia's Mike Schmidt for the major league lead.

After Boisclair had fanned, Jerry Grote, making his first start behind the plate since Aug. 27 after having pulled a muscle in his rib cage, doubled to right and took third on a single by Roy Staiger. The Mets took a 2-1 lead when Mike Phillips drove in Grote with a sacrifice fly to center.

The New York advantage grew to 3-1 in the third on Kranepool's eighth homer, a liner into the Met bull pen, beyond right field, that barely eluded the glove of the leaping Parker.

Demery was removed for a pinch-hitter in the fifth, and Bob Moose took over the Pittsburgh pitching. He retired the Mets in order in the fifth but was

Brown Gets an Early Tally Against Yale

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE
Special to The New York Times

PROVIDENCE, R.I., Sept. 18—A fumbled punt at its 16-yard line cost Yale an early touchdown today in the Bulldog's opening game against Brown. The contest was a key one on the Ivy League schedule because these two tams, along with Harvard, were the favorites to win the championship.

The Browns went ahead, 7-0, at the start of the second quarter after Paul Michalko, the quarterback, passed 11 yards to Bill Hill, a halfback, and Greg Rorke kicked the conversion point.

Brown led, 7-6, at the end of the third quarter.

The date was an early one for a pivotal game in the Ivy League. The eight members backed up the schedule by one week this year and started League contests on opening day rather than three weeks into the season as in th past. The coaches made this decision three years ago and the reasoning was that it would be better for Ivy teams, which have no spring practice, to play one another on opening day rather than non-League teams which might be more advanced because of spring practice.

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa., Sept. 18—Thick clouds, mist and a threat of darkness hung over Beaver Stadium today as Penn State and Ohio State met in an unusually late-starting afternoon football game. Light rain fell just before the kickoff of this first meeting between the teams at the Nittany Lion's home field, which does not have lights.

Ohio State led, 6-0, after three quarters as a result of an 8-yard touchdown run by Rod Gerald, the Buckeyes' quarterback, at 8:08 of the second period.

ABS television was responsible for the start at 3:20 P.M., New York time, under the theory that more home fans would be watching late on a September afternoon than at the usual starting time of 1 or 1:30. The TV game was worth more than $200,000 to each team.

A televised game between Penn State and Syracuse at Beaver Stadium in 1968 was completed in the dark because of a late start requested by the network. But that game, in November,

Forego, Shoemaker Riding, Opposes Nine Rivals in the Woodward at Belmont

By STEVE CADY

After an outfit with the official name of "The World's Greatest Jazz Band" played behind the stands, America's greatest race horse went to the post at Belmont yesterday for the $173,200 Woodward Handicap.

The equine star, Lazy F. Ranch's Forego, carried highweight of 135 pounds in the 1⅛-mile test as he continned his bid to become thoroughbred racing's Horse of the Year for the third straight season. With the Woodward changed from a weight-for-age event to a handicap, Forego was conceding from 14 to 29 pounds to 9 rivals on a drying track labeled "wet fast" at the start of the program.

Forego won with a stretch rally, beating Dance Spell by a length. The time was 1:45 4/5.

The winner paid $4.20 for $2 to win. Honest Pleasure and Stumping finished in a dead heat for third.

Willie Shoemaker, racing's fabled 45-year-old jockey rode Forego. Craig Perret was on Honest Pleasure. Shoemaker, who flew here from California on Friday, plans to remain in New York at least a week for riding engagements

Forego, a tall son of Forli, didn't race as a 2-year-old. But he hasmade up for lost tmie with a remarkable record htat showed 27 firsts (19 of them in stakes) in 46 career starts. He went into the Woodward with earnings of $1,381,077.

His assignment was considerably more demanding htna it had been in the same race the last two years. He won both those runnings while carrying only 126 pounds—hte scale weight for older horses a five-pound concession from older male rivals.

This was Shoemaker's first time on Forego's back. The horse's regular rider, Heliodoro Gustines, has a contract with Greentree Stable, which entered Hatchet Man in the Woodward. So Frank Whiteley, trainer of Forego, sent for the Shoe, whose mounts have won more than 7,000 races and earned more than $40 million.

In the Meantime, Honest Pleasure's trainer, LeRoy Jolley, was working on

Who Was the Villain at Forest Hills?

To the Sports Editor:

Parton Keese, in his Sept. 4 story of the tennis match at Forest Hills between Ilie Nastase and Hans-Jurgen Pohmann, says in his opening sentence, "Ilie Nastase disgraced Forest Hills yesterday."

The story describes a kind of behavior one expects from either drunks or seriously deranged people. If Nastase were playing baseball, basketball or football and did any of the things Keese describes, he would be out of the game in seconds. Hockey, of course, is different.

But both hockey and tennis suffer from the failure of the same people—the rulesmakers and the officials. Hockey uses the excuse that it is a contact sport. What is the excuse of the tennis people? Racquets are thrown, obscene gestures are made, fans and officials are cursed, opponents are threatened. What is tennis, some kind of a brawl?

Remember when tennis was considered a gentlemen's game?

Forest Hills Is a Disgrace, A Slave of Commercialism

To the Sports Editor:

The lead on The Times story read, "Ilie Nastase disgraced Forest Hills yesterday."

Quite the contrary is true. It is Forest Hills that disgraced itself as well as those who professionally play, promote and publicize tennis.

In this decade we have witnessed the decay of what once was an elegant athletic competition at the highest level of sportsmanship and skill. Today, it has become the Barbie doll of the Las Vegas-TV-Drydock Country-Great Neck conglomerate.

It has richly earned the likes of Nastase, King, Connors and the pornojester, Riggs. Compare these clowns with the class of a generation ago: Kramer, Sedgman, Brough, Hart and Seixas. Compare the disciplined aficionados of that era with the dilettantes and thrill-seekers that occupy the stadium today.

When did you encounter such weak-spined officials who permitted fans to usurp the role of the linesmen, waive rules of play and conduct and in general permit themselves to be berated publicly as exemplified by today's clowns of the court?

When Forest Hills gave up grass for artificial turf and resorted to night competition, it took the final step in joining the other vaudeville acts that now pose as sports in the carnival of professional athletic competition.

Pohmann, Not Nastase, Is Viewed as the Villain

To the Sports Editor:

As an avid tennis (and Ilie Nastase) fan, I was appalled, as were so many others, at the goings-on at Forest Hills. However, I am more appalled at the complete lack of mention, let alone understanding and sensitivity, of the not-so-subtle, ugly and seemingly calculated manner in which Hans-Jurgen Pohmann manipulated the already basically anti-Nastase crowd, using them to beat Nastase when he knew that he alone could not. He almost succeeded.

The constant preening, once Pohmann knew that he'd won the crowd, degenerating into clenched-fist exchanges with them on every point won, arms raised in victory over points won as early as the second set, and the final series of martyr-like, heroic returns to the battlefield after the questionable "agony" of his leg injuries, combined to produce one of the ugliest displays of mob sentiment I have ever seen. Pohmann knew what he was doing, too.

Nastase usually begins a match with two strikes against him—his temper and personality, and an audience with built-in hostility towards him. Consequently, in light of all of Pohmann's antics and those of the spectators, who, pray tell, is naive enough to expect Nastase to behave with Anglo-Saxon sportsmanship?

JUDITH BERECZKI

No Room for Gentlemen In Today's Tennis World

To the Sports Editor:

I have been a tennis professional for nearly 40 years and until recently rather prided myself on producing a number of players who, although never of championship caliber, were creditable performers.

Now that I'm coming to the end of my career, it saddens me to realize that the long sun hours have been wasted and that I've shortchanged my students.

It's too late now for me to apologize to the 12-year-old I removed from a tournament years ago because he threw his racquet over the backstop after he failed to return a ball that he thought was out, or to write a note of contrition to the girl I reprimanded for a gentle "damn" after she blew an easy volley. The best I can do is to hope that these few words will be printed and that some of you, my earnest pupils, will read this apology.

Instead of concentrating on the elliptical swing, I should instead have tested your vocabulary with special commendation for your increasing proficiency with four-letter words. Instead of testing your footwork and your quickness in getting to a drop shot, I should have timed you as you rushed from your service position to your opponent's service line to protest when the linesman called your serve a fault.

Forgive me, those of you who did not win the sportsmanship award at the close of the summer. That meager silver cup should have been replaced with the choicest vulgarisms, the foulest obscenities and the most vituperous contempt for all linesmen in general and for that man in the umpire's chair in particular.

I'll do better in the next world.

Nastase 'Stole' Match Using 'Lunatic Antics'

To the Sports Editor:

The debate over Ilie Nastase's behavior at Forest Hills during the match with Hans-Jurgen Pohmann is almost as bizarre as the incident itself.

I was in the stands, and with few exceptions everyone was appalled at the weird, lunatic antics of Nastase and astonished that he got away with it. His intimidation of officials and call reversals literally stole the match from Pohmann.

Condoning the behavior by calling him a "tennis genius" is absurd and irresponsible. Genius or no, a professional tennis player who screams, spits, shouts vulgarities and makes obscene gestures doesn't belong on a tennis court. Such behavior debases his opponents, the officials, the sponsors, the fans and the enchanting game of tennis itself.

Nastase seems less controlled as time goes on. Perhaps his "genius" has peaked and starting to decline. Perhaps he senses it.

And Now a Few Vital Statistics About the Sport Fan

By PAUL T. OWENS

Most of us have been raised following some kind of sports average. Whether it was the batting average of a major league baseball player, how many yards our favorite football player carried the ball each time he ran or some other fact about a running, scoring and sweating hero, our thoughts were filled with numbers. In fact, so smart and accurate were we with all that we knew about sports that our parents wanted to know if we could trade it in for better grades in school.

We never developed though, a taste for statistics about the spectator, the fan who needs heroes and hot dogs to make sure he's still alive.

Let's take a look at Mrs. Fontella Lake. She was voted last year's Super Fan because she has not missed one baseball game in 14 years and has proved that she spends an average of 26.7 percent of her total family income on game tickets, hotdog dinners, sugar ice pop, cheering felt flags and autographed box scores.

Medical studies determined that she spends an average of 67.3 percent of her total personal energy discussing in loud terms with players, officials and friends the games she lives through. Mrs. Lake was selected by the players to be the No. 1 Mother Figure, for they have grown to expect her at every game and attribute a great part of their success to her spirited loyalty.

The team's most valuable player mentioned that she most typifies the major leagues as being the best place for big boys to play where their mothers know where they are. She will be escorted to every game this season in a limousine with five mannequins designed and dressed as her favorite players.

The average game has 305 fathers who promise their children that they'll be "right back" with the autographs of every player in the dugout, with an average of 304.5 returning with programs filled with signatures signed by themselves. The average father or mother chasing a foul ball for a souvenir bruises an average of 4.2 kids in the way.

Let Junior Do the Waiting

The average wait in line for hot dogs is 1.1 innings. The average wait in line for beer is just under two innings. The average for let-the-kid-wait-in-line for hot dogs and beer is almost three innings, with the last inning of that time spent by the father or mother looking for the kid.

Recyclable words and thoughts occur at the rate of 8.3 per person per minute in a crowd of less than 50,000 and extend to 13.9 a minute in a crowd numbering up to 125,000 people. The average sentence length in any game is 1.5 words. The longest sentence has lasted three innings. The average adult vocabulary decreases 25,000 words a game to sounds and words of 2.5 syllables or less.

The shortest tempel was that of Alan J. Begstern, age 59. Begstern jumped onto the field after a center fielder missed two fly balls in one inning, grabbed the player's mitt and told him to get up in the stands, that he would finish the game for him.

The average fan injury starts at a picnic, from the bottle of beer that swims across the chest of America's afternoon of the fan trying to imitate the touchdown runner, and ends up around a lawn sprinkler with a twisted ankle.

The average fool interferes at least 8.7 times with everyone else's good time, throwing debris and obscenities and blocking views with his coarse physical personalities. Spilling 1.9 cups of coffee, Coke or beer down someone's shirt or shoes or on top of someone's head is included in his act.

Beware the Rushing Fan

The average fan running with his box of coffee and drinks and peanuts and popcorn to get to his seat in time for the kickoff has 4.5 percent respect for those in his way. Fifty-eight percent of all fans leave from 10 to 25 minutes before the game ends because they feel they know who the winner and loser will be. Less than 1 percent of the sports audience will wait for 20 minutes after a game to allow the parking lots to empty to have less of a bumper-to-bumper ride home.

The biggest exaggeration during the week happens in a barber shop where men who didn't go to the game boast about what happened based on what they have read in the newspaper or heard on the radio, and argue how they couldn't be wrong because, "I was there. I saw it. Now how you gonna argue with me?"

The average time spent by the average fan reading the sports section is 4½ hours a week. The first thing people ask when they see you have a paper is if they can look at the sports section. When they say they'll return it, you, the average fan, will tell them, "It's all right. I've already read it twice."

No matter whether the average kid grows up to be a winner or loser, or neither, every one of them will have the question to ask each other on any Monday:

"Hey, did you see what happend on Sunday?"

To the Sports Editor:

How consistent! Our throwaway society extends even to the great national pastime — baseball. Murray Chass's moving profile of former outfielder Curt Flood (Sept. 9) pointed up more than just a "Forgotten Man."

In a sport notorious for its hacks and retreads—more commonly referred to as major league managers—there is no room for a proud individualist who had the temerity and imagination to buck the system. So the $100,000 player of just a few years ago is this year's idle discard.

Perhaps, in the near future, instead of filling up those dreary "Whatever Happened to . . ." books, America will find a use for its greatest, wasted natural resource—underutilized people.

Tennis Fans Pollute Forest Hills Atmosphere

To the Sports Editor:

Like an army of African killer ants, the tennis enthusiasts have left Forest Hills, leaving behind barren, sparse grass bare of marigolds, chickweeds and buttercups. Even the lowly clovers and dandelions have been trampled upon, and we residents must wait a year before we see them again in fresh floral display.

I have observed with displeasure the antics of many of our distinguished visitors. They hog our sidewalks so we cannot pass, they obstruct our driveways and leave their litter behind them. I have seen a young mother take her baby out of a shoulder halter to set him on my neighbor's lawn as if on a pottie.

They attract peddlers and vendors who hawk products for sale with boisterous outcry and they invite in the policeman who, for some unknown reason, ticket our cars and not theirs.

Yankees' Playoff: 2d Hottest Ticket As New Excitement Grips the City

games.

Jack Dempsey will be at these playoff games.

"This is still the Big Apple," said Steinbrenner, who also builds ships in Cleveland.

Mike Rendine, the Yankee ticket manager, started formulating plans for selling playoff tickets as far back as July, when he understood that this was no false alarm, that these Yankees were for real. Every morning he would look at the standings in the papers and see the Yankees in first place. By eight games. By nine games. By 10 games. And more.

So he got ready. He began setting up shop in a room on the basement floor of the Stadium—B139, the "Ready Room"—and now that room is command central for ticket distribution. It is a concrete bunker with a thin red carpet. It has chairs and tables, and men and women who work at processing ticket orders. It is the busiest room in Yankee Stadium.

Ticket Demand Soars

"We're busy as hell," said Mike Tinghitella, who has been selling Yankee tickets since 1947. "We never expected this much volume of mail. This demand is tremendous."

Rendine expected.

He hired 15 temporary employees to meet the mailman.

Each morning's mail brings more bags of letters. Large, canvas bags of letters. There were 6,000 letters requesting tickets, in multiples of at least three and usually 12, that arrived at the Ready Room on Thursday. There were 6,000 more on Friday. Mostly they came from the metropolitan area. But Steinbrenner received one request from London. And Carmen Kaiser, one of the temporary helpers, received one from Alabama.

"My God, look," she said, as she was typing the order. "I've got one from Alabama. I can't believe it."

Each ticket request must be accompanied by a certified check or money order. No personal checks are accepted. No cash is accepted. Period.

Orders with cash or personal checks are simply sent back. Unfilled.

"We can't take cash, and we can't trust personal checks from anyone," said Rendine. "Maybe 5 percent of the orders come in like that, and we just send them back. Maybe 1 percent come in without postage and handling money. We send them back, too. It costs us $2.40 a letter to send out the tickets, and we can't afford to do it."

There are the wise guys who try to bend the rules a bit. They're the ones who send in their applications with a sweetener, maybe a $10 bill clipped to the form. Call it a tip, for prompt service.

Locking the Ready Room

"It's a bribe," said Tinghitella, who takes pride in the responsibility of padlocking the Ready Room every night so nothing gets borrowed in the middle of the night. "No other explanation I can see. They want us to make sure they get their tickets. We just send the money back. That stuff doesn't work."

The men in the Ready Room process all orders. Jim Sarrantonio starts by opening all letters. Other men separate the complete applications from the bogus ones, record the numbers of ticket requests and match them to the checks. Once in a while John Guglielmo is called in; he's in charge of searching out irregularities. He has a trained eye for potential scalpers—on Friday he uncovered what looked like a scam. He had 18 different requests for four strips of tickets each from 18 different people in New Jersey. The catch was that the handwriting on all 18 applications was the same, and the 18 money orders were all numbered in sequence from the same bank.

"Normally, I'd send them back," Guglielmo said. "But since there's no limit on how many tickets you can buy, I guess we'll have to fill them all."

Ultimately, the requests are given to the women typists, who log each order on special manifold sheets and address the mailing envelopes. The tickets will not be sent out until today or tomorrow.

The tickets are locked in a vault near Rendine's office on the ground floor. Only three men—Bobby Overland, Jerry Waring and Clem Jurgens—know the combination to the vault. Those men are in charge of sorting the playoff tickets, coding them and assigning them to the proper distributor.

As you might imagine, lately they are popular men.

"I get calls from guys I haven't seen since high school who know that I work with these tickets," Overland said. "My first question to them is—'Hey, what have you been doing for the last eight years?' Their first question to me is—'Can you get me some tickets?' I tell them to write in, just like everybody else.

"Seriously now, can a jeweler be conned out of his gold?"

The Yankees have designated 51,308 seats as mail-order box and reserved for the three Stadium playoff games, Oct. 12-14. Should either of the final two games become unnecessary because the playoff has already been won, money will be refunded.

There is no limit to the number of tickets one may buy now although Steinbrenner reserved the right to set a limit if individual orders appear too big. One must buy "strips," single tickets for all three games, $24 for box strips and $18 for reserved strips.

"We want the public to see us," Steinbrenner said. "We don't want this to be a closed show. It must be clean."

But in all probability, about 33,000 seats for each game will be sold to the general public, with about 18,000 seats a game already reserved for "priority buyers," who have first option on the tickets. These include season-ticket and group-plan holders, sponsors, players and their families. Stadium employees, baseball executives, media representatives, politicians and special interest groups who have done business with the Yankees all season.

Game-Day Supply Small

Assuming the Yankees sell out their mail-order tickets, the 2,396 remaining general admission and bleacher seats will be sold, for $4 each, over the counter on game days. With mail order, the era of the sleep-in at the ticket booth is gone forever.

There may be an additional 3,128 bleacher seats available to the general public at $4 each on game days. Those seats are being built now, at a cost of $136,000—Steinbrenner and his friend Larry Fisher are chipping in $30,000 apiece. The Yankees are paying the remainder, but Steinbrenner says that New York City has agreed to reimburse the club at a later date.

Steinbrenner is awaiting a league ruling on his plan to give those seats away, during the playoffs, to underprivileged children. If the league says, no, sell them to the public, he will comply. Either way, he has put himself in a position to become a hero with some segment of the population. It's a position he doesn't mind being in at all.

John Guglielmo displays two orders that were received with $10 bills attached. The money was sent back.

Red Sox: Lost Romance

BOSTON, Sept. 18—The Great Wall still stands in left field and so does Carl Yastrzemski. But otherwise, Fenway Park is a changed and sometimes lonely place these days, one year after the Boston Red Sox captured the public's fancy as the underdogs who became folk heroes. And now, where has the romance gone?

Sports of The Times

You can stand in 64-year-old Fenway Park these September days and it's not difficult to flash back to the scenes that bewitched the nation during the last pennant race and the last World Series. Fat old Luis Tiant spinning and tantalizing on the pitcher's mound. Trim young Freddie Lynn patrolling center field and making baseball history as the rookie of the year and the most valuable player in the American League. Bernie Carbo pinch-hitting his home runs and Bill Lee talking his role of "the spaceman." Carlton Fisk hitting the ball over the screen after midnight, and the whole joint jumping while the rousing Red Sox clawed away at the Mean Machine of Cincinnati until the final out of the final game.

When it was over, The Boston Globe put things in perspective in an editorial that said:

"For two weeks, nobody cared if the trains ran on time or if the stocks rose or fell. New York faced default and Henry Kissinger met Chairman Mao. But in Boston and Cincinnati, all that was put aside for the time. It was a contest between Middle America . . . and New England with its fusty old Fenway Park misshapen but cozy as a living room with real grass and seating for 35,000 (not counting the fans on the billboards) . . . and stoical Darrell Johnson waiting and watching as an ageless Cuban showed what it means to pitch from the heart. It matters not that Cincinnati won the World Series. There is no one in Boston or Cincinnati who can complain of the sportsmanship and skill and the delicious anxiety this World Series brought into our lives."

New Boos for Old Heroes

That was last year. Now the Red Sox rank fourth, the "delicious anxiety" has gone, and so has stoical Darrell Johnson—dismissed in midseason, one-quarter of the way through his glittering new two-year contract. The ageless Cuban pitcher is one year older, and so is the rookie of the year. Lynn, Fisk and Rick Burleson did not even sign their contracts until August, and were booed by the people who had cheered. Carbo was traded. Lee hurt his arm in a team brawl with the Yankees. And Tom Yawkey, the proud owner of the romantic Red Sox, died on July 9 while the gloom was gathering around his old ball park.

Dick O'Connell, the executive vice president and general manager of the team, still has the wrist watch they gave him as "executive of the year." But he can step out of his paneled office behind third base, sweep his eyes over "The Wall" and he knows better than most that a great deal is missing along with the magic.

"You can tell it's different," he said, puffing on a Havana cigar. "The ticket office closes at 5 o'clock now instead of 7. Also, I can go home now and sleep instead of replaying the game all night.

"Our mail isn't much different, but Fisk and Lynn heard a lot of booing all summer, even after they signed. Our attendance is actually up, and we'll probably go about 1.8 million, second biggest in our history. But that's because of last year. It happened after we won the pennant in 1967, too. The next year we had our biggest attendance ever — and finished fourth. Has the legislature voted any resolutions condemning us? Not yet."

Associated Press

Carl Yastrzemski after a game

O'Connell is a shrewd, witty man who seems resigned to fate even when he's grieving, like now. He notes that a few things changed for the better: the left-field wall was replated and a new scoreboard was built high over the center-fieldbleachers to carry animated messages and cartoons.

Fenway's Winds of Change

"The players say it changed the wind currents and makes it harder to hit home runs," he reported. "They don't say why it also cut down on their hitting singles.

"What happened to the Red Sox this year? Well, first, the short spring training hurt us. I know the camps were closed to all the teams and a championship team should be able to recover. But our guys went through the motions for a while. Even after getting off to a slow start, they always felt they could do it tomorrow.

"I guess they thought they were better than they were. Last year, we won because everybody played up to 100 percent. This year, too many guys played below 100 percent.

"Then they began to second-guess Darrell. You know, things like they could have won last year without him and now tey weren't winning with him. Darrell was always a little aloof, and he got more aloof. Baseball is a very individual game—you're up there alone with a bat in your hands. Last year when we didn't have good pitching we got good hitting. This year when we didn't pitch we didn't hit. Last year the line drives dropped in. This year the other team caught the ball."

Do the Red Sox realize they can't win it "tomorrow" anymore?

"It should be fairly obvious to them now," Dick O'Connell said with a smile and a sigh. "It's sad."

driven from the mound in the sixth.

Millan opened with a single and moved to third on a single to right by Kranepool, who took second after Parker had fumbled the ball. Kingman flied to Parker in short right for the first out. Then, after Boisclair had been intentionally walked, Grote hammered a single into left that scored Millan and Kranepool. Doug Bair replaced Moose and worked out of trouble by retiring Staiger and Phillips. But the Mets led, 5-1, after six innings.

The Pirates picked up a run in the seventh on singles by Parker and Hebner and a double-play grounder by Rennie Stennett that brought home Parker.

But the Mets reclaimed a four-run lead with a tally of their own in the seventh. Mazzilli walked with one out, stole second and scored on a double to left-center by Millan. This made the score 6-2, the final tally.

The victory was only the second for the Phils against Reuschel, who has beaten them nine times.

Carlton's first three strikeouts ended each of the first three innings, with Cub runners on base. In the eighth the Cubs had runners on first and third, but Carlton got Ed Putnam, a rookie, to ground into a double play.

With two out in the second, the Cubs had loaded the bases on singles by Joe Wallis and Reuschel and a walk to Sperring, but Carlton struck out Kelleher.

The Phils had another scare in the seventh, when Gary Maddox made a fine running catch of Putnam's fly ball, collided with Johnstone and slumped to the ground. Maddox was shaken up but not injured seriously.

Phillies 4, Cubs 1

CHICAGO, Sept. 18 (AP)—The Philadelphia Phillies ended a three-game losing streak with a 4-1 victory over the Chicago Cubs today. The triumph was only the sixth in the last 24 games for the Phillies and raised their lead over Pittsburgh to four games, following Pittsburgh's 5-2 loss to the Mets.

Steve Carlton (18-6) lost his bid for a shutout in the seventh when the Cubs' pitcher, Rick Reuschel, doubled and scored on a single by Mick Kelleher. Carlton struck out 11 batters.

Garry Maddox opened the game with a double, moved to third on an infield out and scored on Mike Schmidt's single. The Phillies scored again in the fourth on Jay Johnstone's triple and a sacrifice fly by Tim McCarver.

A double by Johnstone started a two-run ninth. A pinch-runner, Ollie Brown, scored on a single by Larry Bowa; Bobby Tolan, who beat out an infield hit, scored when Reuschel was charged with a balk.

Royals 3, White Sox 2

KANSAS CITY, Sept. 17 (AP) — George Brett drove in all three runs tonight to back the seven-hit pitching of Kansas City's Dennis Leonard, carrying the Royals to a 3-2 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

With the scored at 2-2 in the seventh, Brett's single to left scored Fred Patek with the deciding run. Patek had singled off Rich Gossage (9-15), stolen second and taken third on Jim Wohlford's sacrifice.

The Royals took a 1-0 lead in the first on singles by Wohlford and Tom Poquette and Brett's sacrifice fly. The White Sox tied the score in the second when Sam Ewing doubled, went to third on an errant pickoff attempt by Leonard (17-8) and scored on Bill Stein's infield out.

The Royals made it 2-1 in the third when Brett's infield out drove home Wohlford, but Ralph Garr's single in the fifth tied the score again.

Keystone Ore Seeks 2d Leg Of the Crown

DELAWARE, Ohio, Sept. 18 (AP)—Keystone Ore will renew his bid to become the first horse in six years to win pacing's triple crown for 3-year-olds when he starts as the co-favorite with Armbro Ranger in Thursday's Little Brown Jug.

The Little Brown Jug, which will be held on the mile track at the Delaware County Fairgrounds, is the second pace of the triple crown this year.

Stanley Dancer drove Keystone Ore to victory in the Cane Futurity, the first leg, in August at Yonkers Raceway. The final pace is The Messenger Stakes on Oct. 30 at Roosevelt Raceway in Westbury, L.I. Dancer was the last to drive a triple crown winner, accomplishing the feat with Most Happy Fella in 1970.

Armbro Ranger, the 2-year-old pacer-of-the-year in 1975, will be Keystone Ore's main challenger if Joe O'Brien is able to drive him.

O'Brien, who is in the harness racing Hall of Fame, fractured his pelvic bone in an accident earlier this summer, but has continued to drive.

Keystone Ore, partly owned by Dancer, has captured 14 of 21 starts for over $300,000 in earnings in his career. Armbro Ranger, a son of Steady Star, has eight triumphs in 20 races with earnings over $154,000.

Billy Haughton will try for a sixth Little Brown Jug driving victory with Windshield Wiper, a lightly regarded entrant.

candy mountain of the Pitts-h Pirates' pitching staff. In the tes pursuit of the Philadelphia ies in the National League East,

After his 15th vic-game sweep in Philadelphia, the t-7-inch left-hander quietly dis-ed his role as if he had been in big leagues for 15 years instead 5 months.

grew up in Brooklyn actually, the Parade Grounds where he d to pitch. And where he realized he had to preserve his arm. When he was 15, he was mature enough to know his arm was being jeopardized by sandlot managers. Sometimes he played as many as three games on a Sunday, a Catholic Youth Organization game at 9 in the morning, a Police Athletic League game at 11 and an American Legion game at 1 in the afternoon. If he wasn't pitching, he'd be at first base or in the outfield.

"You'd run from diamond to diamond," he recalled, "without even time to stop for a sandwich."

He had been "striking everybody out" since he was 8 years old in the Little League, and long before that he had tagged along to Central Park where his father managed a semipro Friendly Tavern team.

"But at 15 people were abusing my arm to finish first, to win trophies," he says. "They weren't interested in me."

John Candelaria wanted a career, not a trophy. He knew the Pirates were scouting him, along with many other major league teams. Rather than risk injuring his arm, he stopped pitching.

"It wasn't any one manager, but there's only so much you can take," he says. "One game I pitched 14 innings, then I was used in relief three days later. I stopped then and there."

He played basketball instead. He played it so well at La Salle Academy that he accumulated more career rebounds in Catholic high school competition than any New Yorker except Lew Alcindor of Power Memorial, now Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of the Los Angeles Lakers. He also played summer basketball in Puerto Rico, where his parents were born. He was about to attend the University of Utah on a basketball grant-in-aid.

"I hadn't pitched in three years," he recalls, "but the Pirates' scout, Dutch Deutsch, kept telling them to draft me."

Associated Press

Deutsch also signed Willie Randolph off the Brooklyn sandlots before the Pirates traded the second baseman to the Yankees.

"I had been a Yankee fan all the way as a kid, and both the Yankees and the Mets had scouted me when I was pitching," John Candelaria remembers. "I guess they forgot about me, but the Pirates didn't. They even took me to meet Roberto Clemente and he asked me how much of a bonus they were offering. I told him $13,000, but with Joe Brown [the Pirates' general manager] right there Clemente told me in Spanish not to take it, that I could get a lot more."

His bous has been estimated as high as $50,000, the most expensive in Pirate history for a second-round draft choice. He has justified it. He had an 8-6 won-lost record as a rookie, then dazzled a national TV audience with 14 strikeouts against the Cincinnati Reds in the playoffs. Oover the last three months he has had an 11-2 record, including a no-hitter against the Los Angeles Dodgers, after a slow start.

"I wasn't in the rotation at the beginning of the season," he says, "but I had no right to complain."

At the time the Pirates were using George (Doc) Medich, obtained from the Yankees, as a starter along with Jerry Reuss, Jim Rooker and Bruce Kison.

"They're established pitchers," John Candelaria says quietly, "but I think now I've earned a spot in the rotation."

How to Select a Racquet

By CHARLES FRIEDMAN

In the United States Open men's final, Bjorn Borg used a Bancroft wood racquet weighing 14½ ounces, a monster. Jimmy Connors used a lighter Wilson T-2000 metal. Borg's racquet was strung with gut at about 75 pounds of tension—extremely tight. Connors's was more loosely strung. Connors won the match. Did his racquet make the difference?

Some people may think it did. But in the end, the racquet will play according to the skills of the person wielding it. It may also give him a feeling of confidence and comfort, which is why choosing the proper racquet is important.

There are so many racquets on the market that a buyer may easily become confused. Wood or metal? Fiberglass or graphite? The prices range from $10 to $130.

First of all, it would be advisable to discuss with a tennis pro the kind of racquet that is right for you. He has given you instruction and knows what you are capable of. He can offer valuable tips.

Hard and Consistent Strings

Because of the wide price range, you should decide how much you want to spend. A beginner may start with an inexpensive model and, as he improves, switch to something better in quality. He should examine the frame for symmetry and to see if it has cracks. The strings should be consistent and be hard to the touch. They are important because they will give you "feel" on your shots. Strings that are worn will not do so; you will hear no "zing" when racquet and ball make contact.

The average player usually has an idea of the kind of racquet he wants. But for the beginner, it's much harder to choose. He sees that the racquet has a handle, throat and head. The handle is covered with a grip of leather or plastic. The grip and weight are important, for they will affect your game. If the grip is too small, you will not be able to control the racquet well on contact with the ball; it may shift in your hand. If the grip is too large, control may again be a problem; the racquet may fly out of your hand because you have not been able to hold it firmly.

So the idea is to try several grips and choose the one that is most comfortable. The same holds true for weight. A racquet that is too light will twist in your hand; one that is too heavy will make you arm-weary and possibly bring on the common ailment known as tennis elbow. Borg has the strength of arm and wrist to wield his weapon.

Some racquets are heavy in the head and light in the handle, or vice versa. Again, you should choose the one with which you feel most comfortable. Later, as you learn more about the intricacies of stroking, you may find that you prefer a head-heavy or handle-heavy model.

Merits of Wood and Metal

Racquets are marked light, medium and heavy, ranging from 13 ounces to over 14. For a man, medium should be 13½ to 14; women players rarely can manipulate a racquet that is more than 13½. Grip sizes are available in 4¼ to 4⅞ inches.

A youngster about 12 should be able to swing a 13-ounce racquet with a small grip. Special racquets weighing 11 or 12 ounces and with short handles are available.

One of the biggest controversies in tennis has revolved around the comparative merits of the wood and metal racquets. Some players start with wood, then switch it. It goes the other way, too. Many swear that metal racquets, because of their design, have cured tennis elbows.

Again, the matter boils down to personal preference, to the feel a racquet gives you. Metal may play too fast, wood not fast enough. One may give you touch at the net, the other a certain benefit on your serve. It's like a balance sheet with debits and credits.

To conclude: keep trying different models until one turns up with the right feeting.

Army Rally Overcomes Holy Cross

By DEANE McGOWEN
Special to The New York Times

WEST POINT, N.Y., Sept. 18—No one will be able to accuse Army's football team of a lack of persistence or courage. Not after what happened today in Michie Stadium.

A crowd of 24,176 could hardly believe the roaring finale in which the Black Knights fought back for a 26-24 victory over Holy Cross.

The Cadets, almost completely bottled up for three quarters, turned defeat into their second triumph of the young campaign, rallying for 20 points in a frantic last quarter.

Holy Cross seemed to have this game well in control, and their fans felt assured of a triumph. Instead the Crusaders suffered their second defeat against no victories and Coach Neil Wheel, in his first year at the helm, won't forget this loss for a long time.

Army, trailing by 24-6 as the final period began, stopped Holy Cross on the Cadet 5-yard line, but then had to punt. Holy Cross fumbled and Army started a drive that ended with a touchdown with 7 minutes 14 seconds to play. The score came on a pass from Leamon Hall to Clennie Brundidge, the fine end, who took the ball out of the hands of a Crusader defender. Hall then connected for a 2-poit conversion with Mark Logue.

Cadet Defense Stiffens

Army kicked off and its detenses, porous throughout the firt half, stiffened. The Cadets took over on their 48 and in six plays scored again. Greg King burst through the middle of the line from 8 yards out. The conversion pass failed, leaving the score 24-20 with 4:16 left.

By now the fans on both sides of the field were urging. "Keep going, Army!" or "Hold 'em, Holy Cross!"

From their 20, after a Holy Cross punt had gone into the end zone, Army marched 80 yards with an air attack that befuddled the Crusaders.

George Dunaway caught a pass on the Holy Cross 41. Then Hall found Brundidge again for a gain of 5. Hall passed 10 yards to Tom Briggs, who stepped out of bounds on the 26. Then Hall hit the flet Dunaway again, this time in the end zone. The clock showed 47 seconds to play.

Hofstra Routed by Post, 27-6

By AL HARVIN
Special to The New York Times

BROOKVILLE, L. I., Sept. 18—They fought the battle of Long Island a little early this year, but the outcome, a 27-6 victory for C. W. Post ever Hofstra, was not unexpected.

The Pioneers, who had the game moved up from Thanksgiving Day in case they got a postseason bid, dominated the flying Dutchmen, sacking Hofstra's quarterbacks 10 times for a loss of 106 yards, intercepting them 5 times, and turning three of theos into scores. Post also recovered two fumbles and turned one into another touchdown.

In addition, the Post defense held Hofstra to a net total of 8 yards on the ground while the Pioneers' offense was rolling up 213 yards rushing.

Ernie Prodromides, the Post senior quarterback from Smithtown, L.I. completed 9 of 16 pases for 118 yards and 2 touchdowns and was intercepted once.

Prodromides also led the Hofstra rushing attack with 62 yards in six carries, followed by Major Finklin, 58 in nine and one touchdown. Sal Cascicola, Post's junior wide receiver from Babylon, was the leading receiver with three catches for 62 yards and one touchdown.

The victory made Post's won-lost record 2-0 and 1-0 in the Met Conference, where it is the defending champions. Post has now won 17 games without defeat.

Post Intercepts 4 Passes

The Flying Dutchme were unable to move the ball on the ground or in the air against the Post defense in the first half when they were held to minus 15 yards rushing and four of Bob Girolamo's 15 pass attemps were intercepted. Post turned three of the interceptions into touchdowns.

Brian Zach, a defensive tackle, got a hand on the first interception and it was caught by Bob Michalowski, a linebacker who was brought down on the Hofstra 35-yeard line.

From there it took the Pioneers only four plays to get their first touchdown, a 9-yard pass from Prodromides to Larry Esposito, his fullback, only 2 minutes 11 seconds after the game started.

Ken Rehders stalled the next Hofstra drive by picking off a Girolamo pass at the Post 39 and returning it 10 yards, but the Pioneers were unable to turn that break into a score.

On the first play of the second period, however, Barry Tice a cornerback, picked off another Girolamo pass at the 28-yard line, and returned it to the Hofstra . 7

A 15-yard clipping penalty provided a momentary setback for Post, but six plays later came its second touchdown on a 10-yard pass from Prodromides to Casciola at 2:48.

Rehders the safety, picked up his second interception of the half on the next Hofstra series, and this time Post needed only three plays to score. Prodromides pitching out to Finklin, who slipped away from a swarm of Hofstra defenders, and ran for 28 yards for the score. Post was offside on the first Steve Tomlinson kick, and his second was wide right leaving the Pioneers with a 20-0 halftime lead.

was the last one of the regular season for both teams.

The crowd of 62,503 was a stadium record. What the fans saw was the sixth meeting between the teams, with Penn State holding an edge of 4-1. The five previous games were played at Columbus, Ohio.

Neither team managed much of a threat the first time it had the ball, although each moved for a couple of first downs within its own territory before punting. Jeff Logan, Ohio State's successor to Archie Griffin at tailback, picked up 20 yards in his first three carries.

Joe Paterno, Penn State's coach, said last night that "we have to pass for about 150 yards to control the game." He had been saying all week, despite an opening 15-12 victory over Stanford, that the Lions must improve their passing game. John Andress, a senior, was up for improvement. His had not been the best passing game in college football, even though he quarterbacked the Lions into a bowl game last season.

The second time Penn State had the ball against the Buckeyes, however, Andress began connecting. He took Penn State into Ohio State territory with Long completions to Rich Mauti and Mickey Shuler. But on a fourth-and-one play, Steve Geise failed to make a first down on the ground for Penn State, and Ohio State took over on its 36-yard line.

Buckeyes Finally Throw Pass

Rod Gerald, the new sophomore quarterback for Ohio State, threw his first pass of the season late in the first quarter, and it was incomplete. On the next play he tried his second pass and was sacked for a 12-yard loss. Early in the second period, he tried to throw again and this time was dropped for a 13-yard losst to the Buckeyes' 9-yard line. Coach Woody Hayes had not permitted Gerald, a good runner, to throw the ball in the 49-21 opening victory over Michigan State last week.

Ohio State intercepted a pass in the end zone, hen scored a touchdown that was set up on a long run by Logan.

Penn State lost a fine chance to score after Andress's passes had got the Nittany Lions to the Ohio State 40. On a second-down play, an Andress pitch-back to Steve Geiss was off target and Ohio State's defensive end, Bob Brudzinski, fell on the ball at the Buckeye 19. So the first half ended with Ohio State leading, 6-0.

Ohio State's big plays in the first half were that interception, by Ray Griffin, and Logan's 43-year run setting up the touchdown. Gerald scored it on a run from the 8, but the Buckeyes missed the extra point kick on a bad snap from center.

Dartmouth 20, Penn 0

Special to The New York Times

HANOVER, N.H., Sept. 18—Dartmouth ended a three-year opening-game victory draught today in convincing fashion as the Big Green routed Pennsylvania, 20-0, before a crowd of 11,300 at Memorial Field.

Starting the season against an Ivy League opponent for the first time since 1949, Dartmouth recorded its first opening triumph since 1972 when it defeated New Hampshire, 24-14.

Dartmouth's defense was the dominant force throughout, holding the Quakers to 58 yards rushing. The Big Green gained its first shutout since 1974. The shutout was only the second in its last 41 games for Pennsylvania.

For the Big Green a junior defensive back, John Carney, raced 61 yards down the right sideline with a punt for Dartmouth's first score just four minutes into the first period.

Dartmouth's defensive line of Kevin Curley, Steve Cordy, Dave Casper and Robinson plus Kevin Young a linebacker played a key role in the victory by sacking both Penn quarterbacks for 35 yards in losses.

Johnny Mason led the Penn offense in rushing with 33 yards in eight carries and also caught eight passes for 46 yards.

Lehigh 21, Baldwin-Wallace 14

Special to The New York Times

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Sept. 18—Mark Weaver returned a kickoff 90 yards for a touchdown to spark Lehigh to a 21-14 victory over Baldwin-Wallace here today.

It was the second victory of the season for the unbeaten Engineers and the season's opener for the Baldwin-Wallace.

Mike Rieker, the Lehigh quarterback, completed 18 of 26 passes for 208 yards, including touchdown tosses of 7 yards to Weaver and 5 yards to Dave April. Greg Pierog added three extra points.

mott and the other to Jim Curry—which provided the early impetus in the drive for victory.

Harvard's defense operated so capably that it held the Lions to one touchdown. That came in the closing seconds of the game when the Crimson's first-stringers were on the bench ready for the victory celebration in the locker room.

Penalties detracted from the Lions' overall effort. It almost matched the home team in rushing with 200 yards as against 216, and with Kevin Burns in the quarterback slot showed a promising aerial attack. A chief drawback was on at least three occasions, the Lions sustained penalties while on the move.

Nine infractions amounting to 79 yards were levied against Columbia. Harvard, also suffering from a lack of opening game finesse, appeared rough in this department. The Crimson was guilty of five penalties and, at one point in the final session, needed 46 yards for a first down mainly because of penalties.

Fumble Aids Harvard

A fumble in the early minutes started Harvard on its way to a 17-to-3 halftime lead. After Columbia had stopped the Crimson in the game's opening sequence, the Lions fumbled on their own 11-yard line, the first time they gained possession.

It took Kubacki and company, slow in getting into offensive gear, six plays to take advantage of their break. Penalized twice—once for delay of game and then once for illegal procedure—Kubacki finally spotted McDermott waiting in the end zone and passed 18 yards for the score.

Columbia held the home team in check for rest of the quarter. Then it created some uneasiness among Harvard's supporters by moving from its own 22 to Harvard 8 with Stephens, Burns and Hickey the keys in the advance.

But Harvard held and Bob McKeon was called on to try a 25-yard field goal from the left side. His kick cleared the cross bar by only a few feet and reduced the home team's edge to 7-3.

The Crimson, held in check the next two times it had the ball, finally scored again at 10:26 of the second period.

Princeton Topples Cornell On Howe's Field Goal, 3-0

Special to The New York Times

ITHACA, N.Y. Sept. 18—Chris Howe kicked a 23-yard field early in the fourth quarter today and gave Princeton a 3-0 victory over Cornell today in the teams' season opener.

Howe's kick was set up when Cornell fumbled a punt. Princeton's punter, Mike Stein, angled his kick for the flag and the ball bounced off Cornell's Eamon McEneaney at the 11-yard line. Mike Shorwood recovered the ball for Princeton. After failing twice from inside the 2-yard wire, Princeton decided to let Howe kick.

The Princeton defense limited Cornell to 137 yards, only 22 passing. A linebacker, Steve Lang, led the Tigers' defense with 12 tackles and five assists. Garland Burns intercepted two passes for the victors.

Isom Gains 161 Yards

Princeton's Bobby Isom of North Babylon provided the game's only offensive spark, gaining 161 yards on 34 carries. Ken Talton led Cornell with 38 yards on nine attempts.

Both quarterbacks, John Flannery of Princeton and Mike Tanner of Cornell, were seeing their first varsity action.

Maryland 24, West Virginia 3

MORGANTOWN, W. Va., Sept. 18 (AP)—Maryland, sparked by Mark Manges and Steve Atkins, dominated West Virginia today and routed the Mountaineers, 24-3.

Manges scored Maryland's first touchdown with 2:30 to go in the first quarter on a 2-yard run and with only 14 seconds to go in the first half the quarterback threw a 32-yard touchdown aerial to Chuck White for a 21-3 halftime lead.

Atkins rushed for 133 yards on 23 carries although he sat out the second half.

Ohio U. 14, Kent State 12

KENT, Ohio, Sept. 18 (AP)—Andy Vetter, a quarterback, scored two touchdowns today, one se up on a fourth-down run by the punter, Steve Green, and the other by a fumble, as Ohio University beat Kent State, 14-12, in a Mid-American Conference game.

Ohio led 7-0 at halftime, scoring on the first play of the second period on Vetter's 2-yard keeper. The drive, which began at Ohio's 36-yard line, bogged down after three plays and Green went back to punt from his own 39. He sidestepped a Kent State rusher, saw daylight and ran 15 yards for the first down. Ohio scored six plays later and never trailed.

William and Mary 14, Virginia 0

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Sept. 18 (AP)—Jim Kruis, a tailback, and Keith Fimian, a fullback, combined for 297 yards today as William and Mary defeated Virginia, 14-0. Kruis scored his third touchdown of the season as he romped for 133 yards on 22 carries. Fimian chipped in with 164 yards as he handled the football 34 times. Altogether, the Indians outrushed Virginia 335-114.

Kruis scored on a 5-yard run in the final minute of the first period. Tom Butler, a wide receiver, registered William and Mary's other touchdown midway the third period on a 13-yard pass from Tom Rozantz.

Michigan 51, Stanford 0

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Sept. 18 (UPI)—Rick Leach, a sophomore quarterback, guided an explosive Michigan offense today to a 51-0 victory over Stanford. The Cardinals failed to make a first down for 26 minutes of the first half.

Harlan Huckleby gained 160 yards in 15 carries for Michigan, scoring once and setting up the second of Rob Lytle's two touchdowns. Leach scored once and threw a 3-yard touchdown pass to his old high school teammate, Gene Johnson.

Michigan alowed Stanford just one penalty-aided first down until only 4:07 was left in the first half. Guy Benjamin, a substitute quarterback then directed a march that led the Cardinals down to the Michigan end zone.

But James Lofton, replacing injured star Tony Hill, was ruled to have caught an apparent touchdown pass out of the end zone on the last play of the first half.

It was the first shutout that Stanford suffered since Southern California blanked them in 1967.

Michigan scored the first time it had the ball with Huckleby, who gained 41 of the 74 yards in the drive, sweeping 8 yards for a touchdown with the game just 7:04 old.

Czechoslovaks Show Flair for Hockey

other Russian Series Set

en as the Czechoslovaks were N.H.L., representatives were N.H.L., representatives were p a five-game exhibition series ter with the Soviet Union, not ovakia.

istory of Canada's snubbing of choslovaks is as long as Can- alry with the Soviet Union. In N.H.L. first met the Soviet an eight-game series. A short Prague to play the 1972 world n Czechoslovaks was tacked on as an afterthought. Since 1972 the Soviet Union has sent many of its national, junior and club teams on tours of North America. Last January two Soviet club teams played a series with the N.H.L.

But Czechoslovakia has yet to arrange its own series with the professional league considered by the Europeans to be the strongest. "We have sent a letter about it to the National Hockey League, said Miroslav Subrt, the president of the Czechoslovak Ice Hockey Federation, "but we have not yet received a reply. They have shown no interest up to now."

Russians Called Bigger Draw

"Although they have a strong club," said Keith Allen, one of Team Canada's general managers, "the Czechs don't have the draw or the charisma of the Russian team. Russia is the magic name now. The Czechs, they're almost modest. The Russians, they're arrogant and they make excuses."

Because the Soviet Union displays the same confidence and arrogance as Canada does about its team, the Soviet team remains Canada's No. 1 rival. The Czechoslovaks, who attach no ideological significance to hockey victories (except when playing the Soviet Union) do not inspire the same outrage in Canadian fans and players. Instead they bring about feelings of respect, and, as demonstrated in the Canada Cup final, a certain fondness.

Czechoslovaks Show Zest

Had the Czechoslovaks beaten Team Canada, a return series would have materialized immediately. As it is, the team goes back to Prague with $100,000 for the Czechoslovak Federation but with no plans to meet the N.H.L. in the near future.

So in sports, as in politics, Czechoslovakia remains in the shadow of the Soviet Union, struggling to establish its own identity. From their first practice here the Czechoslovaks showed a style and temperment that contrasted with that of their Soviet neighbors. They bounded onto the rink in practice jerseys of lemon yellow, tangerine orange and mint green with stockings to match. Talking and joking loudly, they clearly were having fun. The Soviet players would skate through their workouts in silence.

On the ice the Czechoslovaks were exhorted, admonished and praised by their Slovak coach, Dr. Jan Starsi, who immersed himself in the practice sessions, gesticulating and shouting in a manner rather more Latin than Slavic.

Other Things to Celebrate

During their free time the Czechoslovak players were permitted to explore the city and its shopping complexes. They were always happy to give autographs and did not shy away from photographers as was the way of the Soviet squad.

In losing to Team Canda, the Czechoslovaks felt no disgrace and soon they were able to put the series in perspective. "We'll get them in Vienna," the Czechoslovak players said, looking forward to the 1977 world championships in which Canada will participate after a seven-year absence.

Two hours after Canada had won the Canada Cup, the Czechoslovaks were partying in a dining room of their hotel, celebrating the birthday of one Czechoslovak coach, Karel Gut, and the news that Jiri Holik's wife had given birth to junior the night before. Until 3 A.M. the players sat around a big table drinking champagne and singing folk songs in lusty voices. They sang with arms around each other, stamping the floor and pounding the table to provide rhythm.

The Czechoslovaks were happy to be going home after three weeks in North America. Upon arrival in Prague, said one player, each would receive a total of 14,000 crowns, which is equivalent to about $2,405 dollars for playing seven games. The Team Canada players will receive about three times that amount, dividing $150,000 in prize money among playing and nonplaying members.

Would the Czechoslovak "amateurs" receive their money "under the table?" a young player was asked. "No—from hand to hand," he said, slapping his palms, "in cash."

Holyoke Is Now Pulling Its Oars

By MARGARET ROACH

When the first national invitation women's regatta was staged on the Connecticut River at Holyoke, Mass., last year, Mount Holyoke College didn't have a crew of its own and served only as the host. Last spring, Liz Merrill, then a sophomore, heard of a meeting on campus about forming a crew. She had never had an active interest in sports, "but it was a new sport, and I thought it would be nice if Holyoke had a crew, so I attended."

That meeting was the beginning of rowing at Holyoke, an all-women college. Miss Merrill, who became the coxswain of the lightweight eight, and eight rowers began practicing under the supervision of Burt Apfelbaum, who agreed to coach the team. He was graduated from Trinity in 1973.

"Crew was the only sports I qualified for because of my size," said the 5-foot-1-inch, 107-pound Miss Merrill. The 20-year-old psychology student grew up in Tacoma, Wash. "I had never seen a shell or a race—I didn't even know crew racing existed before last year," she confessed.

A local physician, Robert O'Malley, presented the idea for supporting a Mount Holyoke crew to the Greater Holyoke Chamber of Commerce. He also raised funds from friends to assure equipment and coaching for the crew. The Friends of Mount Holyoke Rowing was formed, and the community's largest employer, National Blank Book Company, also offered support.

Miss Merrill calls O'Malley "our best backer—emotionally and financially. He says he had always wanted to see Mount Holyoke rowing on the Connecticut." O'Malley's wish has been fulfilled, through long hours of practice.

"Burt, our coach, had to get us in shape, so he took us to the University of Massachusetts' tanks," Miss Merrill said. "We practiced there for a half an hour every week. We didn't even have a shell or oars—we had to borrow everything." It took the crew a few weeks to get ready for on-the-river experience.

"It was tough to keep interest up," Miss Merrill continued, "because we hadn't even seen a shell. It was very abstract."

The nine Holyoke women did not have enough water experience to compete during the spring, but they persevered. Over the summer recess, each rower agreed, on an honor system, to maintain a rigorous workout schedule —including pushups and running four miles a day—starting Aug. 1.

All nine crew members also agreed to arrive at school early, by Sept. 7, to get in more practice time together. Dormitories were not yet open, so each woman stayed with a Friends of Rowing family.

On Saturday at Trinity College, Mount Holyoke's boat will compete for the first time. But the big test is scheduled for Oct. 9, when the second national regatta will be held on the Connecticut. Holyoke's crew will be pulling against boats from more than 40 other secondary schools and colleges.

Interest in rowing has increased on Mount Holyoke's campus, and crews for two more boats, as well as substitutes, are being recruited now. "Things are definite now," said Miss Merrill, "not tentative as they were in the spring, so there is a lot of interest."

What have the months of preparation meant to Miss Merrill?

"Before this, I loved to waste time. Now I can't afford to waste time. Now I can't afford to waste time because of my involvement with the crew," she said. "We practice for an hour and a half in the afternoon, six days a week. When I'm out with the crew practicing, I forgot I'm at school, forget all the deadlines and pressures. It's really like an escape from all that."

E.C.A.C. Will Honor 4 Former Directors

Four men who served as athletic directors at Eastern College Athletic Conference institutions will receive the conference's annual James Lynah Memorial Award for "unusual contributions in the interest of intercollegiate athletics." They are Rear Admiral Thomas J. Hamilton of Navy and Pittsburgh, Wilford H. Ketz of Union, the late Robert A. (Red) Rolfe of Dartmouth and Adolph W. Samborski of Harvard.

The E.C.A.C. will present the Lynah Awards at its banquet in Lancaster, Pa., on Sept. 27. This marks the third time in the 20-year history of the Lynah Award that four men have been so honored. Traditionally, more than one man is named a winner of the award each year.

Red Rolfe, who died of cancer in 1969, was a Dartmouth graduate who played third base for the New York Yankees, 1935 through 1941, when the Yankees won five American League pennants and five world championships. He managed the Detroit Tigers after World War II and served as Dartmouth athletic director, 1954-1966.

Hamilton, a 1927 graduate of Navy, served in the Navy until 1949. He coached the Navy football team in the mid-30's, was director of athletics at Annapolis in 1948 and then was athletic director at the University of Pittsburgh, 1949-1960. Ketz served Union College for 40 years in many administrative positions, including chairman of the department of education, athletic director, director of physical education and track coach.

Samborski had a similar 50-year career at his alma mater after graduating from Harvard. He left Harvard in 1970 after seven years as the Crimson director of athletics and was commissioner of the Yankee Conference, 1970-1973.

'77 Stage Is Set for Scheckter to Don Formula 5000 and Grand Prix Hats

By PHIL PASH

Ken Tyrrell has signed Ronnie Peterson to replace Jody Scheckter on the Elf-Tyrrell Formula One racing team for the 1977 season. A "benefit" for American fans resulting from this action is that Schekter may do a Formula 5000 program in the United States next season while still driving Formula One for someone else. Schekter used the United States Formula 5000 series as a springboard to success in Formula One, and now that he is firmly established as a Grand Prix driver, he may try to do both. It's a gruelling pace, jetting back and forth across the Atlantic every week, but many other drivers have done it.

About Motor Sports

The United States program for Scheckter involves a substantial "sponsor," according to reports, and could be announced when he is in this country for the United States Grand Prix next month.

The Trans-Am drivers' championship was won by George Follmer, beating out his Vasek Polak teammate, Hurley Haywood, 110-101. Follmer won the final race of the season to capture the crown, and Porsche won the manufacturers' title from Chevrolet, 132 points to 103.

The Scirocco-Bilstein Cup series went to Paul Hacker, of East Greenbush, N.Y., by 2 points (150-148) over Lou Gigliotti of Geneva, N.Y. Tim Startup of Black Earth, Wis., and Eddie Wachs of Chicago also were in the battle to the final race, which was won by Gigliotti, with Hacker second. Startup (138) finished third in the series with Wachs (134) fourth.

In an effort to keep down costs, the National Association for Stock Car Auto Racing (NASCAR) will allow four-year-old cars to compete in the 1977 Winston Cup Grand National series. American-made automobiles from the model years 1974, '75, '76, and '77 will be eligible; in past years, a car could be only three model years old.

In addition to permitting all participants to utilize their present equipment for another season, NASCAR officials announced there would be no change in engine sizes for '77, thus saving participants the cost of new or reworked engines. Carburetion specifications for '77 will be established following a thorough review of the present rules.

The '77 car and engine eligibility policy has been established with an eye toward the growing emphasis on scaled-down cars and engines within the United States auto industry, NASCAR officials said. They noted that it might be that by 1978 only cars smaller than those presently being raced would be available. Therefore, in order not to require participants to scrap their present equipment and field what could conceivably be a one-season car, NASCAR has made it possible for all of its participants to race their proven equipment during '77.

STP Corporation has renewed its sponsorship of Richard Petty's racing efforts for 1977—their sixth straight season together—and Petty again will compete in the International Race of Champions. Petty's I.R.O.C. record is hard to believe—ninth once and 10th twice—and he never has qualified for the final race at Daytona.

Johnny Rutherford, two-time Indianapolis 500 winner, will be the host of a new television program, "The Racers," which will be syndicated in January. On each weekly episode, cameras will follow a driver as he prepares for a race. The viewer will witness the interactions between driver, family, mechanics, car owners and everyone else on his "team." Then the race will be covered from three different angles —through the eyes of the spectator, the team and those of the driver. The emphasis will be on auto racing, but motorcycle, boat, airplane and snowmobile racing also will be explored.

Janet Guthrie is entered in today's Delaware 500 at Dover Downs International Speedway. Her car is a Chevrolet Laguna prepared by Ralph Moody of Holman-Moody fame. . . . Kent Howerton of San Antonio, Tex., is the 1976 champion of the American Motorcycle Association's 500cc national motorcross championship, with the 125cc title going to Bob Hannah of Whittier, Calif.

llege Preview: Philadelphia Textile and Hartwick Likely to Challenge for Title llege soccer season is under of the four semifinalists in ersity Division last year only ersity of San Francisco looms rong contender this season. Illinois, Edwardsville; Howard, and Brown, last season's other semifinalists, are expected to be surpassed by other, stronger teams.

By ALEX YANNIS

This doesn't mean, however, that the Dons from cisco will repeat as National e Athletic Association champ Philadelphia in early Decemloss of a key player, Paul ill be felt strongly on Steve 's team. But the shrewd coach Dons is a clear favorite to t the West in the semifinals. sco's strongest opposition this will come from Philadelphia Hartwick and St. Louis Uniwhich failed to reach the semist year for the first time in as anyone can remember in e soccer.

n San Francisco won the title last year, in the preseason poll issued by the Intercollegiate Soccer Association of America the Dons were ranked 12th. This year the 18-member National Ratings Board has the Dons on top with 13 first-place votes. Clemson is ranked second with three first-place votes, while the other first-place vote has gone to Southern Illinois. Edwardsville, which is ranked fourth in the preseason poll.

Hartwick is in sixth place, below Southern Illinois, and this makes the poll very questionable, because Hartwick beat Southern Illinois in a tournament last week. They say the tournament was not part of the regular season, but the members who vote to rank teams should be aware of these teams' status. Hartwick beat S. I. U. only 2-1 but, judging from the game, was far superior to the Cougars, with better players in every position except a couple.

The inefficiency of the ratings board, made up of coaches, was clearly demonstrated at the end of the regular season last year. Clemson was ranked on top before the postseason tournaments, but when the regional rankings came about Clemson was ranked second to Howard, which was ranked fifth in the final regular-season poll.

"Some of the people who vote don't know what the hell they are doing," a coach said at last week's tournament, which Hartwick won and which was held in Oneonta, N.Y., site of the Hartwick campus.

"They vote on the basis of reputation," said the coach, who didn't want to be identified "because I know a lot of these guys."

The following are the teams we believe to be the 10 best in the nation:

(1) PHILADELPHIA TEXTILE—Although the Rams lost their coach, Walt Chyzowych, who became coach of the United States World Cup team, they have too much talent not to do well. Barry Barto, an alumnus, will coach a team that will play a tougher schedule than in previous years, but who cares when you have players like Dale Russell, John Nusum, Elson Seale and Jimmy Wilson?

(2) HARTWICK—It also has a new coach, in Jimmy Lennox, who replaced Timo Liekoski, now in the pros. The Warriors have an abundance of quality players, like Glenn Myernick, Steve Long, Billy Gazonas, Duncan MacDonald, Jeff Tipping, Art Napolitano, Esteban Reynoso, Angrik Stepanow and Joey Ryan, and a good goalkeeper in Keith Van Eron.

(3) SAN FRANCISCO—Mal Roche and Andy Atuegbu are Negoesco's biggest assets on the forward line, but the absence of Paul Korn will hurt. Defensively, the Dons' "Norwegian Connection" of Tom Tronstad and Bjorn Dahl should thwart opponents. "Depth" will not be Negoesco's favorite word. It wasn't last year, but he still took the Dons to the top.

(4) ST. LOUIS—Harry Keough's intricate scouting system extends no further than his backyard, but the Billikens have always fought with those who rely strictly on foreign aid. Keough's son, Ty; Donny Huber, Larry Hulcer, and Don Droege are the Bills' top players.

(5) CLEMSON—Playing one of the toughest schedules in the nation, the Tigers of Dr. Ibrahim M. Ibrahim will be much stronger this season with the addition of Kenneth Illodigwe, a forward who transferred from Howard and sat out last season. Besides Illodigwe, a sensation as a freshman with Howard, Ibrahim will have Clyde Watson, Rennie Phillips and Dennis Carrington, an excellent goalkeeper who missed part of last season with a broken collarbone.

(6) ADELPHI—The Panthers are in Division I, where they belong. Dr. Mel Less, the coach, will easily replace the goalkeeper, the only player he lost to graduation. But Less has also stocked his team with two good players in almost every position. "We have more depth than ever," he warns.

(7) SOUTHERN ILLINOIS, EDWARDSVILLE—The Cougars are not so good as last year. Greg Villa, their main offensive theat, barely qualified academically. If he drops out, they will be in trouble so deep that not even Bob Guelker, one of the best coaches in the country, will be able to right them.

(8) QUINCY—Except for St. Louis University, no one has done better than the Hawks in the last decade. They will miss Sam Bick and Jim Pollihan, now successful professionals after only a year out of school, but Jack MacKenzie, the coach, has the knack of filling gaps easily.

(9) BROWN—Many will argue that Brown belongs higher. Perhaps so. It will be interesting to see how the team replaces Steve Ralbovsky, the first draft choice of both pro leagues last year. However, Cliff Stevenson, still has Fred Pereira, a forward anyone, including the pros, could use.

(10) HOWARD—Lincoln Phillips is awaited by a season that will not be remembered. There are problems everywhere, but Phillips still insists his Bisons will be competitive.

Other schools that get our vote are Connecticut, Baltimore, Seattle Pacific, Army, U.C.L.A., Penn, Appalachian State, Cornell, South Florida, Indiana, Fairleigh Dickinson, West Virginia and Colorado College. San Jose State, Penn State and Oneonta State.

Vince Boryla thinks that winning and losing have become too important.

"Twenty-five years ago, when I was playing," he said, "it didn't seem as paramount as it is today. It's kind of sad that if you don't win you're a bum.

"I was in the locker room at the Denver Athletic Club this week, and I heard some guys demeaning the Broncos, who lost to the Bengals, a real fine team. I was ready to say, 'Hey, man, have you never lost a sale?' I don't know where that kind of thinking in this country will lead to.

"I do know that when we saw Mike last week, for the first time since June, he looked like he'd aged a year or two or three. Well, there's really no more difficult position in pro sports than quarterback."

"We talk a lot about pro sports," said Mike. "He really helped me by telling me what to expect in certain situations. For example, in my rookie year [1974] he said, 'You just go out there and learn as much as you can. You go out as if you were going to play each week. That way, when you get in, you won't have any excuse about not being ready.'

"He also told me to be very careful about what I say to reporters and that you can't go wrong with accenting the positive."

And he also helped in making Mike realize that a pro athlete's career is not forever. "I'm shocked that there are athletes who don't even prepare for the future," said Mike. "My father talked to me about that a lot. He said you can only play football so long and the better you feel about your future the better football you'll play."

So next January Mike will start classes at the New York School of Law (his wife, Kerry, has been accepted to the Villanova Law School). He has wanted to become a lawyer since his sophomore year at Stanford, where he majored in political science. "What made me realize I could go to law school was quarterbacking," Mike said. "If I can handle game plans, I can handle law."

Haden: Rhodes Scholar for Rams

Haden thought he had played l football game on New Year's 75, and it was a nice way ut. Haden threw a touchdown his friend, John McKay, in the ute as Southern California upset Ohio State in the Rose Bowl. This afternoon the 23-year-old Haden will start his first game in the National Football League for the Los Angeles Rams the Minnesota Vikings. It is L.'s game-of-the-week and you tch Haden and the others on n, Channel 2 in New York, at 4 P.M.

Rams lost their first two quar-, James Harris and Ron l, through injury, which brought wn to Haden in last week's victory against Atlanta. first, and so far only, pass I.F.L. went for a 47-yard touch- Ron Jessie.

spring of his senior year at Haden won a Rhodes scholar- l made plans to go to England nate study at Oxford. But the California Sun team of the ootball League promised him money if he would sign and six weeks before going abroad er.

Goodbye to All That signed. Daryle Lamonica was retired and Haden became the When he left, he had the leading statistics in the W.F.L., the next month, November,

"I really never thought I was going to be a pro quarterback," Haden said last week. "But after I did some good things in the W.F.L. the idea got into my head that I could play in the N.F.L.

"It's up to me to produce now that I have the opportunity. I didn't think it would come so fast, but it's here."

Haden stands only 5 feet 10 inches and weighs 180 pounds. He says that the idea of playing against the famous Viking pass rushers, Alan Page, Jim Marshall and Carl Eller, "boggles" his mind.

"Two weeks ago I was third string," he said. "Now I'm No. 1. Things change fast in this league. If I play well against Minnesota, who knows?"

Haden can complete his studies at Oxford after the football season and one of his fans, Frank Gifford, a fellow U.S.C. alumnus, believes he will be the permanent Ram starter by then. "He has the ability, the poise and the confidence," said Gifford. "He just turns teams on."

Messages From Above

Haden will not be calling the plays for the Rams. If you watch the side-10 fingers," says Knox. "there's almost one of the Rams' assistant coaches, going through body contortions involving his arms, legs, fingers, nose, ears and elbows.

Meyer will be using body semaphore to pass the play-call from the sideline to the field. This is a new system in the N.F.L., replacing the messenger guards Paul Brown used 30 years ago.

The play selection is made up in the press box by Leeman Bennett, another assistant, who phones it down to Meyer. Chuck Knox, the head coach, monitors the call, seldom changing it, and Meyer passes it out to the huddle. The messenger who can make mistakes is eliminated.

Body-semaphore can handle the Ram offense. "With two arms, two legs and 10 fingers," says Knox, "there's almost no limit to the signs you can make."

How about the stealing of signals by the other team? Knox is not woried. Besides the Rams have "live" and "fake" signs, holding the nose, or ear lobe or elbow.

Thinking Confuses Players

"It's possible to steal any sign," says Ray Malavasi, the defensive coordinator who has been sending his signals to the middle linebacker, Jack Reynolds, for four years without a miss.

"But, in football, I think stealing would be counter-productive. When players think about things like that it confuses them and reduces their concentration."

The Vikings have beaten the Rams six of the last seven times they met. The last time, in the 1974 playoffs, hurt the most as the Rams claimed the officials took victory away from them.

Marshall, the Viking defensive end, will be playing in his 224th consecutive game, which will tie the record set by George Blanda, who was merely a kicker for most of his streak.

Marshall's streak began in 1960 when he played 12 games for the Cleveland Browns. The next year, the first for the Minnesota franchise, he was traded to the Vikings and he has started in every one of the 211 games they have played.

He is a phenomenon in that he is hardly a physical culture fan and does no weight lifting or jogging or other exercise in the offseason. And he is still very good at 38 years of age.

After practice now, Davis stays and catches tosses from Richard Todd.

Marinaro, meanwhile, says he had joined the Jets with "the expectations I was to carry the ball 15 or 20 times a game. But I was only in for 27 plays against Cleveland. I need more work."

Marinaro came to New York as the No. 1 runner for a six-figure salary. Yet, he is like most players on a football team. He hasn't questioned his coach face-to-face about his differences.

"You don't want to over-react," explains Marinaro.

Big Game Against Giants

Marinaro's busiest day was against the Giants in the preseason game, when he amassed 95 yards on 16 carries. It was his biggest day as a pro.

"When you carry like that, you get loose and you get geared up," he said.

But Marinaro has been a virtual part-timer since.

"I'm not here to be part of a rebuilding program. I'm here to help them win. I don't want to come out when we're behind. I'm young enough to play."

The Marinaro-Davis combine may be more important than it thinks tomorrow. For Jerome Barkum, the wide receiver with the cherry-picker reach, probably will be out again with hamstring trouble.

Last week Namath threw too high to Lou Piccone, who replaced Barkum. The New York passing game is weaker without the agile Barkum, who is 7 inches taller than Piccone.

The Broncos have been a successful team in defensing the run. Last year the opposition gained only an average of 3.8 yards an attempt, second-lowest in the American Conference. And in the opener last week, the Bengals got only 116 yards on the ground.

Armstrong Is Back

Denver's defense, in fact, is strong. last year the Broncos couldn't get many points because Otis Armstrong was out for 10 games. He is healthy now, and gained 96 yards against Cincinnati.

The Jets' defense needs to halt a quarterback, for a change.

"I want either five good rushes or five sacks," said Coach Lou Holtz during the week. He was directing his men against Steve Ramsey.

In the Jets' first game, five touchdowns by the Browns came on passes.

The Broncos' program printer continued to feel weak on Saturday, for still another new name was added to the Jets' roster. The player is Clifford Brooks, from the Philadelphia Eagles, who will start at strong safety. Shafer Suggs, the rookie who played there last weekend, is injured.

s Revived od, Field & Stream: Tri Jumping nples L.I. Trout Waters

By NELSON BRYANT
Special to The New York Times

L. I.—The mists of dawn st lifted from the meadow parking lot at Connetquot and the wraith-like forms er could be seen only 100

/o dozen fly fishermen were aders and vests and assem- rods for a morning stint e, cold and air-clear waters netquot, one of Long Island's sic trout streams — the being the Nissequogue and — streams that have sur- inted through a fortuitous ivate ownership followed by nty management.

one cannot fish the Connet- 7 A.M. — one pays $5 for of fishing on a beat, or stretch, of the stream, and to keep three trout — many ers were rigged up and walk- the water by 6:30, for some han a mile to go.

that he had not wanted to d the kitchen at 5 A.M., one was scrambling eggs for d a friend on a portable gas ual that would have left me ad not James Woods, a and skilled Long Island fly met Jesse Reinfelder of Lit- nd me with cups of steaming a large box of doughnuts.

Walk in the Woods

fied, the three of us walked e oak and pitch pine woods er end of the river a little ile away. During the walk, Canada geese clamored low a doe bounded ahead of us e covey of quail took wing. aching the stream, we found rising sporadically, although often see them — and some were better than two pounds — cruising above the graveled bottom or over the long, waving strands of green satarwort.

I had chosen the topmost beat because I wanted to explore the upper regions of the river. I soon discovered that it had a healthy population of small trout — most of them fingerling-sized brook trout — but that there was little cover for larger fish in that area. In our four hours of angling we caught several fish, all brook trout, releasing all but two about 11 inches long.

After leaving Bergen and the Connetquot, we journeyed east to Carman's River in Brookhaven, where the fee is only $1 for a day's fishing.

Carman's doesn't have the number of trout possessed by the Nissequogue or the Connetquot, but it is an incredibly lovely stream now fully protected from development along its entire 12-mile stretch. The recent purchase of 114 acres from a developer by the state completes the acquisition of a 4,000-acre corridor on both sides of the stream from its source to the sea. One may fish the Nissequogue and Connetquot through Nov. 30. Carman's closes Sept. 30.

Woods, who has fished all three streams often, had spent most of our time on the Connetquot spotting rising or cruising fish for Reinfelder and me, and he continued this selfless performance on Carman's.

Noting that a great many springs feed the east shore of the section of the river we were on, he told me to drop my dry fly, a No. 14 Adams, close to the edge of the watercress that grows in profusion along the stream. Five minutes later I had a nine-inch brown trout, which I released.

Don Aronow nursing elbow after winning Bahamas ocean race, 1969.

He Sells to 'Men Who Have It Made'

By JOANNE A. FISHMAN

"The Old Man and the Sea?" Hemingway missed this version, by Don Aronow. Aronow's old man is steering his powerboat across the Mediterranean at 64 miles per hour while surrounded by "pretty young girls."

News of Boating

Aronow, whose Cigarette Racing Team boats have dominated the offshore powerboat circuit, has come out with a "super-sexy 1977 Mistress . . . the wildest, sexiest machine ever from Cigarette . . . designed to perform like a Mistress should. . . ."

Aronow took his 35-foot Cigarette Awesome Hull, which recently set an offshore speed record of 90.55 m.p.h., reduced the power and added a new depth configuration.

When asked what type of person buys a sexy yacht, Aronow said:

"Older men who have it made, the kind who would also drive a Ferrari. And they're interested in women . . . womanizers. No clod is going to own one of these. You have to have flair, style."

You also need $50,000. But you'd be in good company. Stavros Niarchos ordered the first Mistress as a tender for his yacht, possibly signaling a new trend in launches. The Awesome model, meanwhile, has a following that includes the Shah of Iran and King Juan Carlos of Spain as well as assorted princes and counts and one customer whose name eluded Aronow for a moment, "but you know him, he's that great Italian lover."

Boats and women seem to have had an affinity for each other since the days of the square riggers, when it was considered good luck to name a boat for a woman, says Norman Brouwer, ship historian of the South Street Seaport Museum. "Ships were regarded as living things, particularly by the Cape Horn seamen who would be at sea for as long as five months without sighting land."

Of course, it was also considered bad luck for a woman to step on board, something Aronow certainly would not have objected to.

With his new design he has combined classic lines outside with an interior not generally found on a 35-foot powerboat: mirrors on the front bulkheads, rich teak workmanship throughout, one large weatherberth, indirect lighting and stereo.

When asked what makes a boat sexy, Aronow, a world champion offshore racer, declared:

"A line that never grows old. The 540-K Mercedes has it. The Ferrari has it. When you look at women, some just look sexy. They have universal appeal, like Elizabeth Taylor."

As with many a classic, the supply is limited. Aronow builds only 100 boats a year in his North Miami Beach yard. He has also sold boats abroad, primarily for use in the Mediterranean.

"People in Italy and France know how to enjoy themselves more than we do," he said. "They use their boats more, and they're very style-conscious. They appreciate the finer things. It's a man's boat, but women love it."

However, no woman has ever loved it enough to buy it. If a woman were interested, though, what should she look for in a sexy boat?

"A fast man," says Aronow, a middle aged man who has it made and drives a Ferrari.

Hounds Will Run at Exhibition in Virginia

By WALTER R. FLETCHER

In the same rolling country where George Washington rode to the hounds more than 200 years ago, a colorful pageant will be enacted Saturday at the Fairfax steeplechase meeting at Belmont Plantation in Leesburg, Va. Randolph Rouse, master of hounds, accompanied by Albert Poe, the huntsman, will lead the Fairfax park across the infield in an exhibition between races on a steeplechase card that has attracted the top timbertoppers in the country.

News of Dogs

Twice a week, members of the Fairfax Hunt, which will celebrate its golden anniversary in two years, take off with the pack and engage in a four-hour run.

The foxhunting season in Virginia has begun again after its customary five-month hiatus.

"We don't hunt from the beginning of April until the end of August," said Rouse, master since 1964.

Discussing the pack, Poe said: "We have 50 dogs at the kennel. They are a cross between English and American foxhounds, leaning toward the English type, which is bigger with more bone. The American, however, is much speedier. I plan to change the type here by breeding more to the American foxhound, so we will have a faster-running pack. We may also use a Walker hound in the breeding to add stamina and hunting ability.

"We will keep the tri-colored coat," Poe continued. "The lemon-and-white coat, favored by some packs, is hard to see in the snow, and red is difficult to distinguish in the woods."

For a hunt, Rouse and Poe use 36 dogs, with eight running at the front end. "When a pup becomes a year old," said Poe, "we start him with the pack, and he runs until he's 6. The dogs run in groups, and those up front usually stay there for about three years."

Several times a year various packs from the East compete against each other, notably at the Marlborough Hunt Bowl in Maryland, the Virginia hound show at Oatlands (a national landmark near Leesburg) and at Bryn Mawr, Pa.

"More women ride with us than men, about a 60-40 ratio," said Rouse.

The feature on Saturday's steeplechase card is the Bowman Bowl, named for the late A. Smith Bowman Sr., who helped organize the Fairfax Hunt and was its first master.

A. Smith Bowman Jr., a director of the hunt and president of a distillery in Fairfax County, recalling the early years, said, "Because we were close to Fort Myer, several officers stationed there would ride with us. Gen. George Patton and Gen. Jonathan Wainwright hunted quite regularly and Pat Hurley, when he was Secretary of War, was a frequent guest."

Albert Poe blows horn to call dogs

Ralph Evans, president of the hunt, said, "This is probably the only situation where horses carry dogs. Our Fairfax pack is supported by proceeds from the race meeting."

"Our listing in the Hobie Cat co-op advertisement in The New York Times really paid off."

Flagship Marine Atlantic Highlands, N.J.

"As a result of our ad in The New York Times I can see a big increase in our boat sales," writes Hartley Squires of Flagship Marine.

"We have sold five boats to people in the area who did not even know we sold sailboats. Another great thing is that our ships store business has increased because of the added exposure. Count us in on the next ad."

FOR YOUR YEAR-ROUND LEASE

1976 Lease-Rental Guide

OR WEEKEND RENTAL

Lease your car from Mercedes-Benz peoplethey're definitely committed to your satisfaction!

Every car we lease carries our own individual commitment of customer satisfaction.

Perhaps that's why we've been so successful and enjoyed the patronage of discerning drivers for more than 20 years...and leased hundreds and hundreds of fine Mercedes-Benz cars.

As for leasing plans, we have them all—from 24 to 48 months and we'll be glad to "tailor" one to your specific needs.

So—if you're interested in leasing and if you're very particular about your individual plan—come visit us at either one of our two salons ... because the cost could be pleasantly surprising.

WHY BOBCOR?
Because we have THE Ferrari mechanic. He's from the factory race team & he can do ANYTHING. Because unless your car is being serviced at the Ferrari factory or Bobcor, it's not getting SERVICE. Because a Ferrari is a different animal; it needs a different mechanic. Bobcor has HIM—and his crew. Service, major service, race preparation. 1 hr from NYC or Phila at the NJ shore. Are you on our mailing list?

Leasing Chevrolets and Other Fine Cars

Challenge Avis.

See if our deal on a '77 car stacks up against your deal.

It's one thing to get a good price. And another thing to get a good deal. Because if the price fits but the lease doesn't, you won't be happy.

At Avis, we think we can fit you exactly. So before you sign anybody else's lease, ask about ours.

After all, we've got a reputation for trying harder. Make us live up to it.

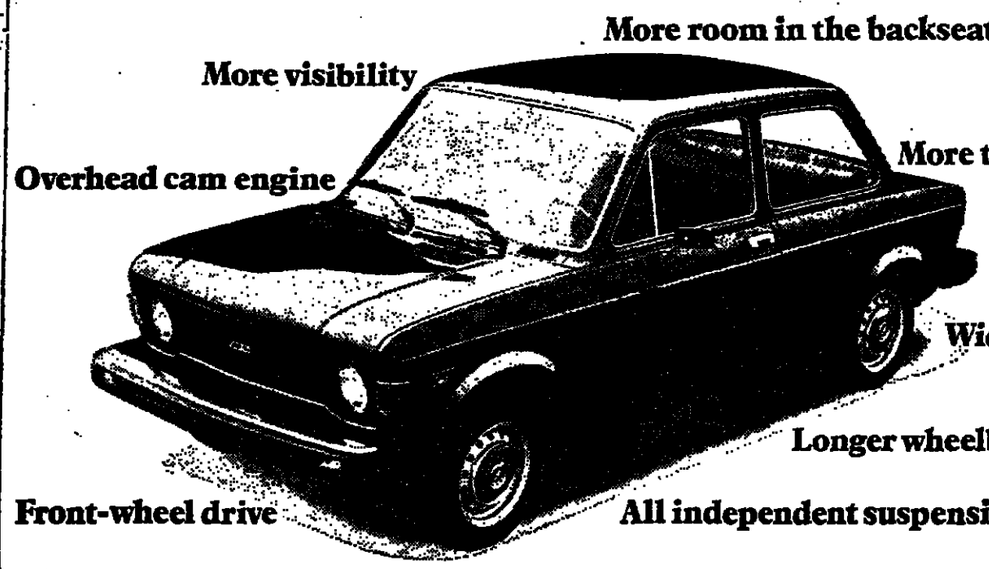
Fall Automotive Sales

What you get on the Fiat 128 that you can't get on the Datsun B-210 and the Toyota Corolla at any price.



You probably already know that both the Datsun B-210 and the Toyota Corolla offer a lot of standard equipment for the money. What you may not know is that the Fiat 128 gives you standard equipment that isn't available on these Japanese cars no matter what you'd be willing to pay.

It is this standard equipment (displayed above) that makes the Fiat 128 such a remarkable driving experience. The front-wheel drive makes it exceptional in the snow. And mounting the engine transversely creates more room for passengers and luggage in the 128 than in either of the Japanese models.

And there are other differences in the Fiat as well.

The only way to know exactly what you're buying is to drive all three cars. And check the prices of all three cars.

If we don't get you one way, we'll get you the other.

FIAT

There are two makes of diesel car sold in America. Ours lists for some $3,000 less.

Peugeot 504 Diesel	Mercedes 240 D
List Price: $8,260*	List Price: $10,278*
	Options: 1,121
	Total: $11,399
Wheelbase: 108.0"	Wheelbase: 108.3"
Front headroom: 39.7"	Front headroom: 39.1"
Front legroom: 40.9"	Front legroom: 42.0"
EPA estimated fuel mileage: 35 mpg highway, 27 mpg city	EPA estimated fuel mileage: 31 mpg highway, 24 mpg city
Velour upholstery.	Vinyl upholstery.
Rack and pinion steering.	Recirculating-ball proportionately powered steering.
Sliding sunroof standard.	Sliding sunroof $378 extra.
Metallic paint standard.	Metallic paint $435 extra.
Electric front windows standard.	Electric windows (front and rear) $308 extra.

The price difference between our Peugeot Diesel and a comparably equipped Mercedes 240 D is, perhaps, the most obvious difference between them.

Both cars are similar in size and roominess. Both can be had with many of the same comforts (although, with Mercedes, you'll have to pay some $1,100 over the base price to have them).

Both cars give you power-assisted four-wheel disc brakes for fast, sure stops. Both give you four-wheel independent suspension and steel-belted radials for a smooth, stable ride.

Both Mercedes and Peugeot give you the benefit of decades of experience with diesel engines. Since its first production diesel in 1928, Peugeot has built more than a million light diesel engines.

Both the Peugeot Diesel and the Mercedes Diesel give you all the operating economies of an engine that has no carburetors to be adjusted and no spark plugs, points, or condensers to be replaced. And of a fuel that averages nationally 6¢-7¢ less per gallon than unleaded gasoline.

The significant difference is, Peugeot gives you all this for some $3,000 less (counting Mercedes' $1,100-plus extra charges for essentially the same kind of equipment that's included in Peugeot's list price).

So if you're considering a Diesel, be it a sedan or wagon, consider the Peugeot first. Because a diesel car is even more economical when you can get it for thousands of dollars less.

The Volvo Sale.
(A once-in-a-decade event.)

Every year around this time, cars go on sale left and right.

One car you've probably never seen on sale is a Volvo.

Because people quick to recognize quality in a car have always snapped Volvos up quickly.

But this year, we have some '76 Volvo left. And with our '77 models coming in soon, we have to move them out.

So we'll be making deals on Volvos like we've never made before.

Unlike a lot of sales, this one doesn't feature remnants. You won't end up with some odd-colored, stripped down or about-to-be-discontinued model that nobody wants.

You'll be able to make a deal on a wide selection of fully-equipped Volvos.

You can choose a 2-door, 4-door or station wagon. From either our 240 series. Or from our luxurious 260 series.

No matter what you choose, you'll end up with a car that has become legendary for its safety, comfort and intelligent design.

So come in and look at one of our Volvos today.

These prices may not be around tomorrow.

Trade talk of the special appeal of bus tours for older single women on modest incomes who like to travel together or are lonely (newly widowed, perhaps) and crave companionship or a brief diversion from sadness. However, the tours also attract many married couples and children, Grossman said, and some single young adults — foreign visitors, for example, who want a brief slice of Americana but don't know how to arrange it themselves.

"There's something peculiarly charismatic about a motor coach tour," said a high school teacher who had been on the same Casser tour to the Pennsylvania Dutch country three times. "You start out as strangers, but by the time you're three hours down the pike you have latched onto someone. Soon everybody knows everybody else, at least a little."

After hamburgers and coffee at Howard Johnson's, Chris Gavigan and I stood outside the bus and chatted with Kay and Tom Lillis, temporary New Yorkers from Ireland, who are soon to return there. Tom was recently graduated from Fordham University and is a microbiologist at the New York University Medical Center.

Over the next two days the four of us got to know each other fairly well. I also met two fortyish widows—one's husband had recently died unexpectedly of a heart attack, and the other's husband had had a long struggle with cancer. I also met Jeanne, a New York City social worker, and a young Swiss architectural student whose name I never learned because she spoke little and discouraged companionship. "They put me in the same room with her," Jeanne said later. "I tried to chat, but she turned over in her bed and went right to sleep."

On most bus tours, passengers rotate seats, usually twice a day. The aim is to give as many passengers as possible a chance to sit up front and get the best views. Various tour operators have various rotation formulas. On

On the foliage trail in New Hampshire—a stone face and a cog railway.

Autumn Leaves: A Budget Ramble

By DAN CARLINSKY

As surely as the leaves turn each year, Easterners by the millions take the arrival of October as a signal to head north for the fall foliage display and a last fling at puttering around the countryside before winter sets in.

For those to whom "north" has always meant upstate New York—or possibly Massachusetts or Vermont—I offer an alternative. The leafing territory of New Hampshire provides a worthwhile change of pace. True, the best of it—the northern half of the state—is a few hours' extra drive for New Yorkers. But there are extra dividends. Consider the White Mountain National Forest: mammoth mountain ranges alive with crystal waters and rich in a variety of trees that make for autumn viewing at its best.

One good way to mix scenic drives with "things to do" is to spend a few days touring the small lopsided oval that cuts through the heart of the White Mountains, an oval formed by U.S. 3 and 302 and State Routes 16 and 112. It includes awe-inspiring Mount Washington, the highest peak east of the Rockies and north of the Carolinas; the magnificent Kancamagus Highway, clean and supremely scenic, and a couple of highway strips with more than enough shops, restaurants and children's attractions to satisfy any itchy traveler.

The White Mountains are crowded during early October (and will be until someone devises a way to make the leaves turn for, say, six months at a time), but no more so than other popular areas. Anyone planning to visit during the first two weeks of October, prime foliage viewing time, should read the box on Page 14 for a few hints about motels, inns, campgrounds and mountain huts and then phone—don't write—for reservations.

Possibly the most spectacular attraction in the entire state is the cog-railway ride miles up the side of Mount Washington to the summit, 6,288 feet above sea level. The special mountain-climbing trains belch coal smoke as they chug for an hour and a half up grades so steep it's tough to stand in the cars. The views on the way up are outstanding, and from the summit, well above the treeline, exhilarating if the weather happens to be clear. Round-trip fare: $9.95 for adults, $5 for children.

Who can say the ride isn't worth the money? But the budget-conscious will cry for cheaper ways to enjoy the wonders of the White Mountains—and there are plenty of them. Herewith, a sampling of simple pleasures along the lopsided oval that are calculated not to break you on your jaunt in search of autumn foliage. No charges unless otherwise noted.

ROCK OF AGES — About 15 years ago, Charlie Kimball, a native of the Granite State, was coming down out of the mountain woods on a piece of his property at the edge of U.S. 3 in North Woodstock. It was raining, and Kimball thought he saw a bear. Closer investigation showed the "bear" was a nun, kneeling in the downpour at a spot where she said she had had a vision of the Crucifixion. Kimball was so moved he built a tiny one-room church some 20 feet up atop a huge boulder. He still keeps the church in tiptop shape, and every so often a couple will show up there with a justice of the peace and their immediate families for a wedding ceremony. Visitors are invited to climb a flight of steps up the boulder for a look around. The mini-church, on the west side of U.S. 3, next to the Maple Museum (which isn't a museum anymore), doesn't appear in guidebooks or on tourist maps. It should.

LORI-LYN BAKERY — Diagonally across the road from the church on the rock is Lori-Lyn, which sells fresh corn muffins and cranberry muffins, a quarter each. Fifteen cents buys a spicy homemade "hermit" laced with raisins. Delicious. Open weekends only, Labor Day through Columbus Day.

HOW GOLF WIDOWS AT THE CONCORD OVERCOME THEIR GRIEF.

Husbands have been known to forget family ties at the first tee. (This is particularly a problem at the Concord, where we have 3 times as many first tees as most resorts....one for each of our golf courses).

While this can cause a problem at some resorts, it causes nothing of the sort at the Concord. In fact, it's hard to tell which of our guests has a better time....the abandoners or the abandonees.

While husbands are off pursuing par, wives are busy liberating themselves on our tennis courts. There's a lot of instruction, if you need or want it, complete with all the latest equipment, videotape machines included. And most of our courts are open 24 hours a day, so you can play whenever the urge hits. (The Concord may well be the birthplace of a new social statistic: the Tennis Widower.)

Wives can also paddle around either of two huge swimming pools. Go out boating. Get healthy at our Health Club. Or simply relax and enjoy the countryside....with the kids or without. (There's a complete kids' recreational program with Counselor supervision).

Of course, a little absence makes reunions all the more fonder. And we provide a choice of backdrops for them: intimate cocktail lounges, discotheques, gourmet cuisine and a nightclub where you can be entertained by the world's most famous entertainers. (Never a Cover or Minimum).

After all, you can't get more out of a vacation than your vacation place puts into it. And nobody puts more into it than the Concord.

"The only thing warmer than Jamaican sunshine is my Jippi Jappa greeting. Jippi Jappa is my two-month 'friendship festival' of exciting new attractions, irresistible bargains, and the very special warmth of Jippi Jappa Jamaican hospitality. Won't you join me?"

"Hi, I'm the Jippi Jappa girl—and I'd like to extend a very special invitation to my island. October 1 through November 30, we're having a Jippi Jappa festival. A time when the true spirit of our island will speak for itself. It's going to be the happiest of times, really, with all the richness of our folk tradition. We've reggae concerts by-the-sea, fun and games plus hotel performances by singers and dancers from Jamaica's National Festival (and some of our not-yet-famous youngsters too!). All kinds of exciting, brand-new things to see and do, and special bargains like free tennis clinics at any hotel with a pro, and a two-for-one golf greens fee! Even a free day's car rental with any rental of five days. But what Jippi Jappa really is, is our way of letting you know just how happy we are—when you are."

We can tell you about our fall foliage in black and white.

But you have to come to Pennsylvania to see it in color.

Pennsylvania has more kinds of beautiful leaf colorations in autumn than any other state. Our 127 varieties of trees, over 15 million acres of them, turn bright red, burnt orange, sunny yellow—no wonder the early settlers called it flaming foliage.

The first two weeks in October you'll find the best colors in the northern part of the state; weeks two and three in the central section; and weeks three and four in southern Pennsylvania.

And while you're here to see the trees, you can still take in Bicentennial events. They're still in full swing.

We could go on and on, but come see it yourself. In color. And bring your camera.

Pennsylvania's Flaming Foliage.

PITTSBURGH

To the Editor:

I am a Pittsburgher, temporarily away from home, and I read with great interest the piece on Pittsburgh by Mike Kalina (Travel Section, Sept. 5). May I suggest additional points of interest:

1. The Nationality Rooms in the Cathedral of Learning on the University of Pittsburgh campus. These rooms were planned and funded by groups of various nationalities that have been part of Pittsburgh's industrial and cultural development.

2. The Stephen C. Foster memorial hall on the Pittsburgh campus which contains a wealth of memorabilia of this beloved writer of songs.

3. The Heinz Chapel, also on the Pittsburgh campus, with its beautiful stained-glass windows.

BIRDWATCHER

To the Editor:

Add unforgettable encounters: in Budapest this August we saw a man with a falcon in the subway. Trains in the Budapest metro come every few minutes, and this one was not crowded. The man was young and he held the bird, fastened by a chain of metal rings, in his leather-gloved hand. He spoke softly to the bird and stroked it with his other hand. He entered the train, sat down and left after two stations.

Subway riders in Budapest must be more jaded than those in New York, for nobody else seemed to pay any attention.

Notes: Will Mexico Really Cost Less?

By STANLEY CARR

Mexico's decision to float the peso and then to peg it at 19.90 to the dollar had travel agents and tour operators doing a Mexican hat dance in frustration last week as they tried to determine exactly what the change would mean to American tourists.

For more than 20 years the peso had been pegged at 12.5 to the dollar. The devaluation made goods and services, in theory at least, cheaper to visitors. But reports about the long-term effect on tourism were conflicting. The main puzzle concerned inflation and to what extent rising salaries and prices south of the border would swallow up the increased strength of the dollar. But in any event pocket money now goes farther in Mexico, making it "a good buy" for some months to come at least. And there is a possibility that some package tour prices will be reduced.

Vince Hodgins, director of the Mexican National Tourist Council, was—not unnaturally—optimistic. He hoped hotel and restaurant prices, which can be changed only with Government approval, would hold firm. "A room that used to cost $40 a day is now about $25 because of the fall in the peso's value," he said. "Tour operators should be able to reduce the prices of their new packages. The over-all benefits will be substantial."

Another spokesman for Mexico, however, thought that rates would be allowed to rise gradually to reflect inflation, but not as far as to negate the 37 percent drop of the peso. The spokesman added that air travel within Mexico would certainly be cheaper now for Americans.

Bob Cordero, general manager of Asti Tours in New York, said: "I doubt that our prices can come down because our hotel contracts are made in dollars and, of course, American air fares remain the same. Furthermore, hotels we do business with have raised their rates during the summer and I think Mexican prices generally will continue to go up."

Though worried by reports of Mexican inflation, René Pouteau of Tradewind Tours in Great Neck, L.I., expected reductions of 15 to 25 percent in the cost of land arrangements in 1977. (One-week O.T.C. packages to Acapulco to be run by Tradewind this winter are currently priced at $339 a person.) Mr. Pouteau did not think that rising prices in Mexico would wipe out the benefits to Americans of the cheaper peso.

Another agent, Grace Markusen, said her company was holding off on the production of its Mexican tour folders until it was clear just what Mexican hotel rates would be. The National hotel group, for one, which includes the El Presidente in Mexico City, has stated that it would hold to the new peso rate. "If the Mexican Government freezes prices," she added, "I think there will be considerable savings and, as a result, lower prices of tours."

Other travel spokesmen said they believed that while Mexican prices were increasing, American vacationers' spending money would now go farther and there would be a surge in American tourism.

SMALLER PASSPORT

Starting next January, all newly issued United States passports will be smaller than the ones currently in use. The reduction in size is the first step in the transition toward a machine-readable document to be developed through further research and modernization. The 1977 passport will measure 4.92 by 3.47 inches compared with the current size of 6.12 by 3.75 inches. Other features of the new passport, in accordance with the recommendations of an international panel, will be the elimination of the bearer's height and hair and eye color which are deemed unnecessary. The document will continue to include the bearer's sex. The Passport Office estimates that the Government will save more than $200,000 a year in production costs as a result of the reduction in size. Another benefit, of course, is that the passport will fit more easily into travelers' pockets, handbags and wallets.

plicants. We couldn't offer life on a 10,000-acre ranch down the road aways from the Grand Canyon or bluegrass and racehorses. Obviously they had seen us as the bourgeois suburban blahs we really were and rejected our application.

Four months passed. We had forgotten all about the program when suddenly in June a communiqué arrived—a form letter: "Dear American Host Family: Congratulations! Your guests will be WERNER AND GABRIELLE HERZIG of BRAUNSCHWEIG, WEST GERMANY. They will arrive in DANBURY on AUGUST 5. Please make arrangements to meet them at the BUS."

Along with this came the data that the Herzigs would be spending one week with Colonel and Mrs. So-and-so of Washington, D.C., and one week with Mr. and Mrs. Such-and-such of Larchmont, N.Y., before coming to us for two weeks. Both the other hosts' phone numbers were given so that we could telephone them to make travel arrangements. It was also suggested that we write the Herzigs immediately, extending them a warm personal welcome and filling them in on what they might expect and how they could best prepare for life with us.

Europe has so many countries—we hadn't expected our guests to be from Germany. Many Jewish Americans bristle at the idea of any personal relationship with anyone or anything German. Pete's case is more pointed: He spent his childhood in Nazi concentration camps, from the Riga Ghetto to Bergen-Belsen. His father died in Buchenwald. It's a clear tribute to my mother-in-law's stubborn toughness that she pulled her two sons through and, with a second husband, was able to make it to America after the war. They started life over again here; Pete and his brother are so Americanized now that it's hard to believe they aren't native born, but they aren't, and their memories of Germany are bitter.

Not only were we going to have to confront our own feelings about having the Herzigs but we were going to have to consider theirs as well. To conceal Pete's background would be wrong, but I didn't see how we could manage to work the subject of concentration camps ever so adroitly into a friendly letter of welcome. I dashed off a breezy missive aimed at painting an accurate portrait of the Sterns en famille, in all our suburban ambience.

We received a cheerful reply in English from Gabrielle, who wrote that she taught the language, along with arithmetic and swimming, at a Volksschule—something like an American junior high school. Werner was not a teacher but a manufacturing engineer for an electrical company. By the way, she inquired, our name sounded German. Were we Americans of German origin, and did we by any chance Deutsch sprechen?

American Host Program

If you'd like to entertain a foreign visitor through the American Host program, you can obtain a brochure giving details from the American Host Foundation, Biltmore Hotel, Madison Avenue and 43d Street, New York 10017 (tel: 212-683-6567).

This year, because of the Bicentennial, the foundation has expanded its program to include nonteachers from abroad as well as teachers, the total numbering about 1,800. In an ordinary year about 700 teachers are involved in the program, spending five weeks in the United States and paying $619 to visit the East Coast, $769 to visit the Midwest and $919 to visit the West Coast. The fee coves air transportation, four nights in a New York City hotel and local transportation. It does not cover meals in New York. Elsewhere, meals, lodgings and entertainment are provided by those who volunteer to be hosts.

plies, unfinished projects and other oddments including an aborigine war

I answered equivocally: Pete was born in Germany and came here after the war. He has unpleasant memories and he and his parents always spoke English.

There were no further letters from the Herzigs, but we did get a smudged yellow carbon of a notice the A.H.P. sent to them, saying the people in Larchmont had discovered that "other commitments" would make it impossible for them to be hosts this summer after all. A search was currently under way to find a new host family for them.

Midway through July a second smudged yellow carbon came. A.H.P. was breaking it to the Herzigs that the family in Maine that had been found to replace the people in Larchmont had also developed a case of "other commitments." The Herzigs would now be going to spend the middle part of their American visit—after the stay in Washington—with a family in New Jersey.

Thus Werner and Gabrielle arrived in Danbury, having ridden the bus up from somewhere in South Jersey. Our first hours together were marked by consummate politeness on both sides. We showed them their room, which normally serves as the family study. It has a floppy old couch that opens into a bed, but every other inch of available space is taken up with books, letters, notebooks, magazines, art supplies and other paraphernalia. Gabrielle's room looked like a cross between a boudoir and a club. The Herzigs looked perfectly contented. I noticed that they seemed to have packed their suitcases by the same random cram-and-stuff method we use ourselves. With exaggerated distaste Werner held something up from his bag and made a wry face at his wife. It was a pair of scarlet shorty pajamas, decorated with valentines and lovebirds.

"Oh yes, you see" she explained to us, "I got him those for our wedding anniversary, but he would never wear them, so when we came on this trip to America I didn't pack any others for him. Don't you think they are all right, really?" I assured her they were lovely. Also, I admired her strategy. Pete flashed Werner a look of masculine compassion.

To allow them to stretch their legs after the long bus ride we took them for a ramble through the back roads and woods that surround our house. Predictably, we had walked only a quarter of a mile when our son Joe, aged 2½, declared in a loud voice, "No way," and refused to take another step. Werner simply picked Joe up and swung him onto his shoulders, and there he stayed for the next three miles, laughing delightedly; Werner trotted happily along chuckling and repeating to himself the wonderful new American phrase—"No way, no way." Gabrielle took the chance to make friends with our dog, Jefferson D., a foolish weimaraner that persisted in racing circles around her and barking frantically to get her to chase him.

After dinner, when Joe had been put to bed and the dog had insinuated his 60 pounds into Gabrielle's lap, we asked the Herzigs how they would like to spend the next two weeks. They didn't know exactly, they said. They just wanted to get a feeling for America. I tried a reverse approach. Could they perhaps tell us what they didn't want to do?

Relief showed on their faces. Yes, said Werner, could they please not be taken to see any more old things. The Americans they had met so far seemed to think that anything dating to the Revolution was quite remarkable. "You know," he pointed out apologetically, "for us in Europe there are many houses that date to the Middle Ages. Old for old's sake is not so special."

We understood and said so, which seemed to encourage them to say more. Their stay in Washington had been quite pleasant. The colonel had four lively kids, they had seen all the proper attractions of the capital and had been kept busy; the second week had been spent in a Jersey bedroom community. The husband was busy all day at his job, the teen-agers were off doing their own thing, and the wife stayed home and cleaned, and expected the Herzigs to keep her company. She didn't want them going off without her—she would have felt hurt, they said, but she didn't like to drive and didn't want to take them anywhere either.

All this indicated that our guests were perceptive people, but it didn't help put together a schedule. We switched to desultory conversation—the fact that Pete used to do much the same type of work as Werner, the problems of teaching kids who plan to drop out at age 15, our political frustrations. At length the small talk

VACATIONS THAT ARE ALL VACATION SINCE 1872.

Marriott introduces Barbados' newest resort. It started back in 1820.

That was the year the infamous pirate, Sam Lord, built his castle on Barbados, perhaps the loveliest island in the Caribbean. Certainly the one with the friendliest people. Here his Georgian castle still stands, overlooking a magnificent beach. Surrounded by a manicured English garden, seventy acres of private grounds.

All in all, a sumptuous estate that the Bajans wanted to share with other people. Along with their lovely island and warm friendly ways. So they invited Marriott to come and turn Sam Lord's into a new resort; one of the most beautiful on Barbados.

Marriott left the castle the way it was, and added a village of 200 deluxe guest rooms. And that's not all. Now there're 7 lighted tennis courts (all free), 3 pools (one especially for children) and, of course, the beautiful mile long beach. Nearby golf facilities can be arranged. As well as horseback riding, sailing, scuba and snorkeling. At Marriott's Barbados Resort, you can enjoy 4 restaurants and lounges. Dancing and music every night. Along with a handicraft center and duty-free shops. So you see, when it comes to making you happy, our new resort and the Bajans make a marvelous combination. Because Marriott makes it their business to make people happy. And the Bajans make it a way of life.

CHING, an editor of the ll Street Journal, is based Kong.

OLD CHINA — In the rural New Territories village life goes on much as it did hundreds of years ago in old China. At the border with China visitors can catch a glimpse of the People's Republic, whose rigidly disciplined society is in stark contrast to the free-wheeling atmosphere of Hong Kong. A tour of the New Territories should include a visit to the 10,000 Buddha Monastery above Shatin, which contains literally thousands of statues of Buddha, and to the Kam Tin walled village, constructed in the 1600's and still inhabited exclusively by members of the Tang clan. The village affords a look at a China that has long since vanished within the borders of the People's Republic. There are also vestiges of old China at Aberdeen, the colony's main fishing village, on the southern side of Hong Kong island. The fisherfolk are born, live and die on their boats, though more and more of the younger generation are abandoning this form of life.

RESTAURANTS—Hong Kong offers a variety of excellent cuisines. The most popular fare is Cantonese. The Man Wah restaurant, atop the Mandarin Hotel, offers fine Cantonese food and a superb view. Dinner for two, about $40. Yung Kee on Wellington Street, which is known for its roast goose, and Yaik Sang on Lockhart Road, famous for crab and lemon chicken, are popular with the local folk. Dinner for two can easily be kept under $20. Chiuchow cuisine is also very popular here, undoubtedly because of a large Chiuchow population. Specialties include a goose dish known as lo shui ngor; a combination plate of deep fried crabmeat balls and shrimp balls, and a Chinese cabbage roll stuffed with mushrooms. Two of the best Chiuchow restaurants are the Siam Bird's Nest Restaurant at Causeway Bay and the Chiu Chau Chinese Restaurant in the basement of the Hyatt Hotel in Tsimshatsui. Dinner for two well under $20. Devotees of Northern Chinese food crowd an establishment with the unlikely name of the American Restaurant on Lockhart Road in Wanchai. Its specialties are roast spring chicken, onion pancakes and dumplings. A substantial meal can be had for as little as $10 for two. In the fall the Shanghai Lao Ching Hing on Kai Chiu Road offers freshwater crab, a Shanghai dish. The price fluctuates according to supply and demand, but it is in the neighborhood of $6 per crab. For excellent continental cuisine, there's Gaddi's in the Peninsula Hotel and Hugo's in the Hyatt, which happen to be two of the most expensive restaurants in Hong Kong. An appetizer, soup, entree and dessert will cost about $20 a person at either Gaddi's or Hugo's, drinks extra. The San Francisco Steak House, on Peking Road in Kowloon, serves superb beef and a meal costs about $12 a person. Jimmy's Kitchen is an old Hong Kong institution, and now there are three: in the Central District, in Tsimshatsui and in Wanchai. Jimmy's offers such specialties as Oysters Kilpatrick and Escargot Bordelaise. About $8 a person, not including drinks.

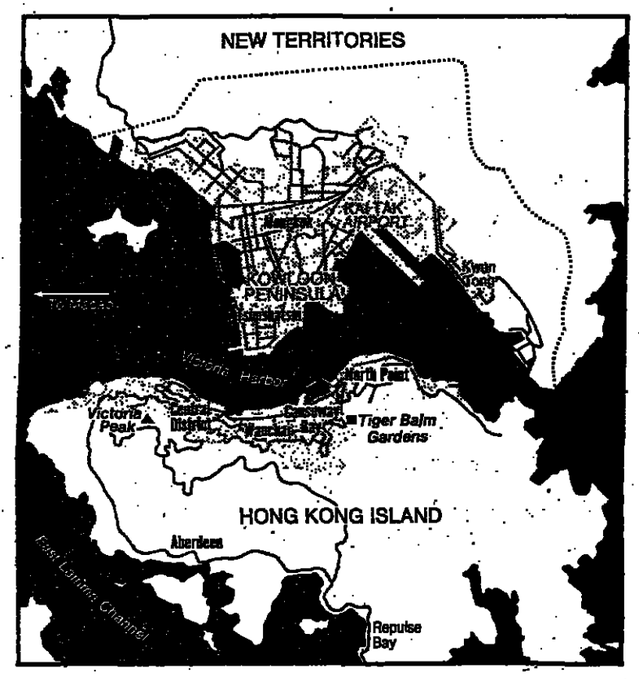
DIM SUM—The most popular form of lunch in Hong Kong is yum cha, which consists of dim sum, or snacks, carried on trays by waitresses who move among the patrons. Yum cha literally means "drink tea," and generous quantities are usually consumed by diners. Served from morning to late afternoon, the snacks, about 30 cents each, include such items as spring rolls and various kinds of dumplings and buns. It is customary to order a dish of fried noodles to supplement the dim sum. The Luk Yu Teahouse, on Stanley Street, is excellent, while the ones in City Hall and the Gloucester Building in the Central District offer good food at convenient locations. Yum cha is economical; a meal for two can be had for as little as $8.

HOTELS—Despite the many first-class hotels that have mushroomed in the past decade, the old Peninsula in Kowloon is still unsurpassed for grandeur and elegance. The ambience of the Tea Lounge in the vast, high-ceilinged lobby is reminiscent of the Palm Court in New York's Plaza Hotel. It is frequented by movie stars and other celebrities and hence is an excellent spot for people-watching. Double rooms range from $40 to $72 a night. There is no dearth of other fine hotels. Both the Mandarin (a double starts at $40) and the Hilton (double, $37) are conveniently located in the Central District. The Hilton, one of the busiest spots in town, has a heated outdoor swimming pool. There are also a large number of good hotels that charge less than $25 for a double. They include the Ambassador and the Imperial in Kowloon and the Singapore and Harbour Hotels on the Kong Hong side of the harbor. For those on a tight budget, there is the Y.M.C.A., with rooms ranging from $5 to $20, double.

SHOPPING—Hong Kong is no longer the shopper's paradise it used to be, but bargains can still be found. Some products, imported duty free, are cheaper than in their country of origin. This is true of radios, cameras, watches and cassette recorders. Visitors would do well to obtain the "Stop and Shop Bargain Guide to Hong Kong," which contains the list price of many brand-name items. The guide is available free at Hong Kong Tourist Association offices. There are offices at Kai Tak Airport and the Star Ferry Concourse and the association's headquarters is at Connaught Centre. The prudent shopper will price the same item in two or three shops before making a purchase. Those prepared to bargain may get a 10 percent reduction on their purchase. At Harbor Village, a handicrafts center in Star House in Tsimshatsui, local artisans demonstrate their skills. Department stores scattered around Hong Kong that carry products made in China offer excellent value. China Arts and Crafts in Star House, the Yue Hwa and the Chung Kiu Department Stores in Kowloon have a wide range of merchandise, including silk, embroidered articles, antiques and jewelry. Around Cat Street, for years the preserve of antique collectors and bargain hunters, the visitor can spend hours just browsing through the many stalls selling everything from antique jade to blue jeans.

NIGHT LIFE—The Theater Restaurant in the Miramar Hotel in Tsimshatsui offers beautifully choreographed Chinese dances and selections from traditional Peking operas. The $8 charge includes the price of dinner. Hong Kong's largest nightclub (seating 940) is the Palace in the new Convention Centre. It presents a lavish 90-minute international revue twice nightly (8:30, 10:30). Charge: $17 a person, including dinner. The major hotels all have Western-style nightclubs or discotheques. For example, the Hilton has the Eagle's Nest; the Peninsula, the Scene Discotheque; the Excelsior, the Talk of the Town; the Hyatt Regency, the ultramodern Polaris. There's nightly jazz at Ned Kelly's Last Stand in Ashley Road.

CHINESE FESTIVALS — Hong Kong's residents have the advantage of enjoying two sets of holidays each year, Chinese and Western. The most important festival is the Chinese New Year, which falls next year on Jan. 18 and heralds the Year of the Snake. All of Hong Kong takes a few days off to celebrate, and almost everyone engages in the ritual of visiting relatives and friends. Children are the main beneficiaries, since older relatives and even friends customarily give them red packets of "lucky money." By custom, all debts are paid before New Year's Day so that the new year can have a clean start. Homes are kept spotless and everyone refrains from saying anything inauspicious for fear of ruining the outlook for the whole year. On April 5 the Chinese celebrate Ching Ming. Ancestral graves are visited and offerings of fruits, flowers and even food are made. May 10 is the day of the feast of the goddess Tin Hau, patron of seafarers. On that day fisherfolk decorate their junks and pay homage to the deity. Also in May is the Bun Festival. The date varies each year to suit the convenience of its organizers (the date for next year hasn't been fixed yet). The festival takes place on Cheung Chau, one of Hong Kong's many outlying islands. Held by the island's fisherman, it includes religious ceremonies, Chinese opera and a carnival parade through the narrow streets of the village. The high point arrives when young men storm 60-foot-high hills of piled-up buns and grab as many as they can carry to guarantee good luck in the ensuing year. The one-hour ferry ride to the island costs less than $1 and tourists are welcome to observe the festivities. On June 2, the annual Dragon Boat Festival is celebrated with dragon boat races at several locations. The colorful races, which always draw large numbers of spectators, commemorate an ancient Chinese patriot who drowned himself in protest against a corrupt government. The Mid-Autumn Festival, which fell on Sept. 8 this year, is held to worship the moon goddess. "Moon cakes" are exchanged and eaten, and outdoor parties are held in the moonlit evening. The cakes are filled with sesame seeds, ground lotus seeds and sometimes a duck egg. Oct. 31 brings the festival of Chung Yeung. On this day observers of the event climb mountains and visit ancestral graves, a tradition that began hundreds of years ago when a man, following a soothsayer's instructions, took his family up a mountain on a certain day and returned to find everyone in his village dead. Now, each year, the ritual is followed in an attempt to ward off impending disasters.



ARTS FESTIVAL—For a month, starting on Feb. 6, the streets will be decorated for the Fifth Hong Kong Arts Festival. Concerts will be given by the Berlin Radio Symphony and the Hong Kong Philharmonic Orchestra. The Festival Theatre Company will present Shaw's "Arms and the Man." Also scheduled are Cantonese and Chiuchow opera, traditional Soochow story-telling and performances by the Chinese shadow puppet troupe. For further information write to the Hong Kong Arts Festival Society Ltd., P.O. Box 2547, Hong Kong.

MACAO—An hour away from Hong Kong by high-speed hydrofoil (about $6 a ride) is Portuguese Macao, tiny even by Hong Kong standards. Macao's 300,000 people inhabit an area of only 10 square miles, which includes Macao island proper and three offshore islands. The ancient streets, many of whose houses look as if they hadn't been painted since the area was ceded to Portugal in the 19th century, are quiet, even somnolent, compared with bustling Hong Kong. Yet the city holds one irresistible attraction for the many weekend and holiday visitors from Hong Kong: its gambling facilities, including casinos, greyhound races and jai-alai, which are illegal in the Crown Colony. For the tourist uninterested in gambling, Macao offers such sights as the ruins of St. Paul's Cathedral, an old fortress, Chinese temples and the home of Dr. Sun Yat-sen, the first President of the Chinese Republic. For auto racing enthusiasts, there's the Macao Grand Prix held every November. Hotel prices are considerably less than those in Hong Kong, with the best hotels, such as the Lisboa, Sintra or the quieter Matsuya charging $20 or $25 for a double. The Pousada Inn, one of Macao's finest Portuguese restaurants, offers such specialties as African chicken and grilled prawns, to be washed down with a bottle of Dao or Mateus. Dinner costs about $12 a person.

CURRENCY—The currency in use is the Hong Kong dollar, which is worth roughly 20 cents. Credit cards and traveler's checks are widely accepted.

The Boom in Mini-Vacations by Bus: A Weekend in Pennsylvania

Parker tours, for example, the occupants of the rear seats move to the front and everyone else moves back one row. On our Casser tour, however, Bill said that with only 27 passengers he felt we should have the option of staying in the seats to which we had originally been assigned or moving around at will, since there was lots of room.

Bill told us that on the first evening the main object was not sightseeing but to get to Reading, where, he assured us dourly, "they roll up the sidewalks at 6 o'clock." We never actually saw Reading, except from a distance, across the Schuylkill River. Our home for the two overnights of the tour was the Reading Motor Inn in a western suburb called Wyomissing.

The guest rooms were tastefully furnished. They had color television and beds that would vibrate if you put a quarter in a slot. But the motel is beyond walking distance from downtown Reading or anyplace else one would want to explore, so anyone without access to a car is stuck there when the tour bus stops for the night.

When we arrived at 10:30 P.M., the motel seemed like fun, but most of us were too tired to enjoy it. The supper club on the premises had a small band, and it seemed as if all the swingers in the Reading area were there. But on Saturday night, when many of us tourists were ready to swing, the only action was in a private dining room, where the class of 1926 of a nearby high school was holding its 50th reunion. "Where is everybody?" Jeanne, the social worker, asked as she sashayed into the main dining room in a long cocktail gown. She ordered a crème de cacao, then embarked on a long monologue about past loves. Occasionally she would pause abruptly, look around wistfully and say: "Where is everybody? Where's it all at?"

Saturday was our first day of sightseeing. We left the motel on our bus at 8:10 A.M. Bill sat silent, able to concentrate on driving, since we had been joined by Kay Leaman, a 62-year-old housewife from Mount Joy, Pa., who works part-time as a guide.

Kay encouraged us to call her by her first name. She talked incessantly for almost two days. She said she was herself of Pennsylvania Dutch stock and she sounded authoritative when she described the history and customs of the Amish and the Mennonites and the other folk of Lancaster County, where we spent most of the day. The Amish are a fundamentalist offshoot of the Mennonites, who are evangelical Protestants noted for pacifism. Usually Casser sends its own guides (they're called "tour escorts" in the trade), but Kay works for Brunswick Tours of Lancaster, which Casser uses as a subcontractor in the Pennsylvania Dutch country. "There's one thing Brunswick insists upon," Kay said, "and that's that we always tell the truth. If we are asked a question and we don't know the answer, we are required to say so."

Most of our attention that day was focused on the Amish, the so-called "plain people" who are famous for somber dress and horses and buggies and who shun most things modern, such as electricity, television and automobiles. They also believe that it is against God's wishes to be photographed. This means that publicity pictures of people in Amish dress are generally not of real Amish but others in costume.

"Frankly," said Kay, "the Amish wish that the tourists had never come."

But the more the Amish seem to crave aloofness, the more the tourists do come. The Pennsylvania Dutch country has become one of the most popular destinations for bus tours out of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. It's popular because it's colorful, quaint and extremely convenient for tourists with limited time and budgets.

The sharp upsurge of tourism in recent years has meant a mushrooming of tourist attractions—farm restaurants, horse-and-buggy rides, steam railroad excursions, food and flea markets, to name a few. Bus tours have become so prevalent, however, that it's sometimes extremely difficult for an individual or family traveling independently to get admitted to a popular site.

Take Wheatland, the home in Lancaster of James Buchanan, the 15th President of the United States (1857-61). It cannot accommodate more than about 45 sightseers (a busload) at a time. It is listed on both the Parker and Casser itineraries, which means that the Pennsylvania Dutch tours of those companies had better stop there or be prepared for passenger ire. So the tour operators phone ahead and arrange a specific arrival time: in our case, 10:45 A.M. That Saturday morning was so bus-busy that a Wheatland guide conceded to me that an independent traveler would probably not be able to get in because of all the commitments to package tours.

To get a relatively close look at the Amish in their own environment, we stopped at the Amish Homestead, a 71-acre farm just off the Lincoln Highway east of Lancaster. The farmers there are a family named Stoltzfus, and they are indeed Amish. But they are actually tenants who farm for the owners, R. M. and A. R. Flory, who are not Amish and are in the tourist business and thus don't mind visitors at all. The farmhouse has several parts. One part, in traditional simple Amish decor, is where the Stoltzfus family does not live. It is open to tourists. The part in which the family does live is closed.

Stoltzfus, which in translation means "proud folks," is a common name among the Pennsylvania Dutch generally, not just the Amish. We had Saturday lunch at the Stoltzfus Farm Restaurant, run by a Mennonite family not related to the people who farm the Amish Homestead. The restaurant is situated near the town of Intercourse. "It used to be called something else," Kay said, "but they renamed it Intercourse because two main routes cross each other there. It's really a legitimate name. It wasn't put there for fun."

Lunch was served family style—eight of us at a long table, helping ourselves from bowls that we passed around. The restaurant had perhaps 100 tables, which members of the family kept filled in rotation as bus after bus disgorged its passengers in the large parking lot outside. We were supposed to have the "seven sweets and seven sours" of a traditional Pennsylvania Dutch meal. I lost count, but I do remember cole slaw, chow-chow, cold corn niblets, fried chicken, German sausage, string beans, apple butter, regular butter, home-baked bread, apple sauce, choice of iced tea, hot tea, coffee or milk and cherry pie or shoo-fly pie (molasses and brown sugar) à la mode. Theoretically we could eat as much as we wanted, but half an hour after we arrived, the bus left.

After lunch, we stopped for 45 minutes in Leacock at the Meadowbrook Farmers' Market. There are several long-established food-and-antique markets in the Pennsylvania Dutch country, but Meadowbrook, a relative newcomer, had clearly been built to catch the tour-bus overflow. A small section specialized in Pennsylvania Dutch cooking, baking and butchery, but most of the long building was devoted to run-of-the-mill "collectibles" of dubious quality but substantial price.

When we arrived in midafternoon, Meadowbrook was overrun with bus tourists. Outside stood coaches of Casser, Domenico, Paragon Tours of New Bedford, Mass., and the Wery Travel Service of Milwaukee, to name a few. Nearly two dozen of the buses were under charter to clubs and lodges whose members pushed about inside. A loudspeaker frequently interrupted with announcements like: "Mrs. Dugan and Mrs. Vandenberg from the Tennessee Baptist Church, please meet your bus." Or, "For all you nice people who came from New York on Bus 534, please return to your bus. We have more goodies to show you. This is Gus, your guide."

At 3:30 P.M., with most of us visibly weary, our bus parked outside the National Wax Museum, four and a half miles east of Lancaster. Kay egged us inside. "Anybody who comes out in 15 minutes," she said, "didn't see all of it. Besides, it has cool, nice restrooms and lots of cold water."

So inside we went, and, to my surprise, it was fascinating. There were audiovisual tableaus of historical events from Indian times to the present, culminating in an exciting mobile demonstration of the way old-time Pennsylvania Dutchmen raised a barn.

From the museum we went to the Sturgis pretzel factory in Lititz, a country town founded by the Moravians. It was 5 P.M. and the factory would have been closed, except that our tour was expected. So a young employee pretended to teach us how to roll and twist pretzels. He concentrated on the nun, who, in her habit, was appealing to the photographers among us.

Back on the bus as we were leaving, Kay walked down the aisle and handed each of us a tan piece of paper inscribed: "Official Pretzel Twisters Certificate." It said that each of us had earned it by "successfully twisting pretzels at the Julius Sturgis Pretzel House."

At precisely 5:20, for the first time that day except at lunch, Kay sat down. "I don't have anything to say for a while," she said over the bus loudspeaker. "You get pretty tired standing up there. Especially when you're 62 years old."

Forty minutes later we were back at the Reading Motor Inn.

Sunday, the final day of our tour, was devoted to Hershey. We left the motel at 8:10 A.M.—precisely the same hour as on Saturday. An hour and a quarter later we arrived at the chocolate capital of the world, the manufacturing city and resort built by and named for Milton Snavely Hershey (1857-1945). We stopped first at an exhibition building called Chocolate World, where an automated ride carried us past displays that showed how Hershey's chocolate products are made. We learned, among other things, that by that morning the exhibition had had 4,360,836 visitors since it was opened on June 30, 1973. Next we went to the Hershey Museum of American Life, a largely unimpressive collection of American Indian, Eskimo and Pennsylvania Dutch artifacts. The exit, as in so many tourist attractions, was through a gift shop.

Then came the climax—at least in the opinion of Kay, our guide. We spent 45 minutes at Founders Hall, a $20 million tribute to Hershey and his wife, Catherine, at the school that they founded in 1909 for needy boys.

"The restrooms are fabulous," Kay said as we parked outside the hall. "I've never seen such beautiful restrooms. So please go to the restroom, whether you have to go or not." Most of us went. We also saw a magnificent rotunda, a spacious chapel-auditorium with carillon and organ, a luncheon hall for the school and two broad lounges.

We drove past the Hershey resort hotel and the Hershey Motor Lodge and Convention Center. We got a glimpse of the Hershey rose gardens and arboretum, but were denied a chance to visit Hersheypark, one of the prime amusement centers in the East.

Then it was time to start home, with a lunch stop in Manheim, west of Lancaster. A town of Manheim was founded by Baron William Stiegel, the glassmaker, and lunch was appropriately in the Baron Stiegel Room of the Evans Restaurant. It was a low point of the tour.

Not that the food was bad—it typical, mediocre mid-American the restaurant, which knew that were coming, was unable to cope us efficiently. There were only waitresses for 42 lunchers—the 2 cluding Kay and Bill) on our bus, 13 others who arrived at 1 P.M. when we did. The place mats sheets of paper imprinted with o those word games in which you s out the capitals of the 50 stat the Union from rows of jumble ters. I located 37 capitals befor waitress took my order, half an after we arrived."

I was lucky; my club sandwich 20 minutes later and I could in leisurely fashion before our departure time. One member o tour asked for pork chops, an waitress said they would tak long to prepare.

Kay Leaman, our guide, left Manheim. Fine print in the brochure had indicated that it have been appropriate to tip he most of us were already on th before we realized she was le I watched carefully and estimate she collected $3.

For much of the way home, m us dozed. As we neared New wick, N.J., Bill attempted to ea boredom by giving us a quiz alo lines of: "How far can a dog ru the woods?" ("Until he stops.")

Bill dropped passengers off Casser terminals in Newark an York. I got off in Newark bec had an overnight invitation i Jersey. It was 6:15 when I le tour, and I was tired. I shook with the Lillises and Chris G and we talked vaguely of try meet again. Then I gave Bill a t as the brochure had indicated I picked up my overnight bag a mini-vacation was over.

Overall, I enjoyed the tour, al I had been to the Pennsylvania country before. Without hesita would go on a bus tour again, al next time to someplace new. T the sightseeing was corny and of the people were clearly not taste, but one should be able some companionable people in load, and I did.

Most of the passengers seem share my view. Chris Gavigan of taking a Casser tour to Ne land "next weekend." "It get lonely during the week in Jerse he said.

A Sampling of Short Tours From New York

Three companies operate short tours from New York to a variety of destinations. Tours to the same place are essentially similar, regardless of who operates them. The main variables in pricing are the number of nights away and the meals (including tips) in the package.

The short-tour season tapers off after the popular fall-foliage trips end in late October, but Thanksgiving time draws many buses to the Pennsylvania Dutch country. The pre-Christmas shopping season is popular for excursions to factory-outlet stores and distant shopping malls. In January through March, many companies operate tours to Florida and other Southern points, but they are usually more than a week long.

Casser offers at least one Pennsylvania Dutch tour a week through November. There are three weekly departures through October—Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Domenico Tours schedules one Pennsylvania Dutch weekend a month in September and October. The price—$61 for shared room and $81 for a single—includes two nights' accommodations but no meals. Also, there is a 6 percent surcharge, which brings the prices to $64.66 and $85.86. Domenico tends to include a few more sightseeing stops than Casser, so in the end it may be a bit of a bargain. However, if a Domenico passenger applies to share a room but no share is available, the traveler must pay the single-room rate. Casser permits a person traveling alone to apply for a share and be guaranteed the share rate, even if no share is provided.

Parker Tours' Pennsylvania Dutch offering is for four days and three nights, with departures every Monday morning through Oct. 4. This tour includes Gettysburg, which the others don't. Like Casser, Parker includes a Pennsylvania Dutch luncheon in the package price, which is $99 per person, twin occupancy, or $126 for a single. Parker does not allow persons traveling alone to share accommodations; they must pay the single rate.

Each company has a scale of cancellation penalties pegged to when a passenger cancels a reservation. Usually a deposit must accompany the reservation, with full payment required two to three weeks before departure. The company, however, sometimes cancels a tour as close as two weeks before departure if it appears it will lose money.

Trips from New York to the Pennsylvania Dutch country or Washington, and fall-foliage tours to New England or Pennsylvania, are usually well booked. However, a Casser spokesman said that early-spring tours were cancel-prone and that New England offerings risked cancellation until well into summer. He insisted, however, that of Casser's 1,000 scheduled departures last year, "maybe 50 at most were canceled."

Information on bus tours can be obtained from travel agents or directly from the operators. The main Casser terminal is at 201 West 41st Street (212-BR 9-1000) and the Parker terminal is at 125 West 43d Street (212-581-1234). The Domenico terminal is in Bayonne, N.J., at 707 Broadway, although its tours have New York pickups (just as the others have Jersey pickups). Domenico's numbers are 212-966-6046 and 201-436-7630.

Here is a sampling of weekend tours, most of which operate every week. Prices are per person, double occupancy.

Washington: two nights, $72 (Parker)

Adirondacks: two nights, $88 (Casser)

Valley Forge, Gettysburg and Philadelphia: one night, $52 (Casser)

Bicentennial Boston: two nights, $71 (Casser)

A Green Mountains (Vermont) resort: two nights, $79, including three meals (Domenico)

Colonial Williamsburg: two nights, $70 (Domenico)

Only Casser is extensively in the one-day tour business for independent travelers. It has an April-to-December assortment of 41 different destinations. A few samples—

Amish country: $24.50, including lunch.

Montauk Point: $19.90, including lunch

Mystic Seaport: $17.65 (lunch additional)

West Point and Hudson Valley winery: $21, including lunch

Stratford, Conn., Shakespeare Theater: $17.80, including theater ticket—P.G.

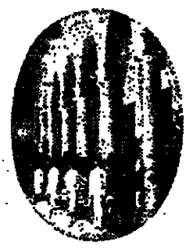
THE MANILA LIVES AGAIN...



A dazzling resort hotel returns to the heart of a fascinating city.

It opened in 1912 to a blast of skyrockets shattering the night. Guests danced till dawn tippling champagne. The throngs were unmanageable.

Manila had reason to celebrate. Now visitors had a regal hotel offering baronial feasts, suites with private butlers, even newfangled telephones. Everyone came. Princes, maharajas and presidents. The heyday lasted generations.

THAT MANILA HOTEL IS WITH US AGAIN. Renewed, restored and expanded.

The spirit of 1912 blazes unquenched. In spacious rooms with high ceilings. Filigree and four-poster beds. Rattan and capiz. Penthouses. The new 18-story tower deftly blended into the 1912 plan.

There's still a butler on-call in the corridor. Dining in four restaurants on cuisine that intermingles the best of four continents. Or in a pavilion floating on the water.

Acres of palatial gardens guard the waterfront, a swimming pool, tennis, golf, health spa and other resort niceties. Sightseeing, sailing, fishing, nightlife, gambling on a casino-ship are yours when you ask.

Don't miss it. The Manila Hotel is a must for any visitor to the Far East. See your travel agent for the details.

one of several large commercial operations in the area featuring kiddy rides, animals, shows, gaudy gift shops and the like. (It's hard not to notice the various bumper stickers, seemingly on every second car. That's because the bigger outfits hire boys to work the parking lots, affixing stickers to autos while their owners are checking things out.) Clark's is unusual in that it has a family of native black bears that perform on lofty platforms and are fun to watch. What's more, the half-hour act can be seen for free from the parking lot, saving thrifty folks the $2.25 fee ($1.25 for children) that it costs to go inside and see the rest. Performances at 12, 2 and 4 P.M., weather permitting; weekends only during foliage season.

THE FLUME — A stunning natural gorge, it runs nearly 800 feet along the side of Mount Liberty, with 60-foot-high granite walls, flowing water and two beautiful waterfalls. A bus goes from the entrance on U.S. 3 part way into the woods, then well-kept footpaths lined with maples, birches, ashes, spruces and poplars lead to the Flume, the equally wondrous Liberty Gorge and Cascade and a lovely pool fed by rushing waters from the cliffs above. All told, a mile and a half of delightful, woodsy walking. Admission to the area: $1.25 for adults, 75 cents for children aged 6 to 12, free under 6.

THE BASIN — Marked only by a small sign on the west side of the highway a bit north of the Flume, it's a big circular bowl eroded in a granite sheet over the years by stones and sand caught in an eddy—sort of a 20-foot-wide pothole. Paths enable visitors to explore the surrounding area to the accompaniment of the soothing sound of rushing water. A great cool drink can be had from the flowing mountain streamlet that trickles out of the stone at the side of the short access road, just below the sign. Nearby are a few picnic tables, which in good weather are usually taken early in the day.

OLD BRIDLE PATH — The White Mountains claim the highest concentration of hiking trails anywhere. Opposite Lafayette Place, a campground and picnic area on U.S. 3 north of the Basin, is the start of the Old Bridle Path, one of the easiest. Even rank amateurs can make the four-mile trek to the top of Mount Lafayette without straining. Allow several hours for the climb up, a stroll along the peak (looking down to the autumn colors) and the return. Temperatures drop swiftly; it's wise to dress for the occasion.

BEAVER TALE NATURE TRAIL — For those not up to the Old Bridle Path there is, at Lafayette Place itself, a three-tenths-of-a-mile nature path, built around a beaver bog. Half an hour will do for this one.

OLD MAN OF THE MOUNTAINS —Farther north, the profile of a man's face in granite, 48 feet from forehead to chin, looks out from a height of 1,200 feet on Cannon Mountain. Best viewing spot is from Profile Lake, just off the road. This geological accident wasn't seen by white settlers until 1805; now it's the state's most recognized landmark. Mount Rushmore it's not, but it has a certain fascination. Free view; telescopic look-see for a dime.

AERIAL TRAMWAY — Every 10 minutes a 27-passenger enclosed car, suspended by steel cables 40 feet above ground, goes up the side of Cannon Mountain. The standing-room-only ride takes about six minutes, but the view is wonderful—particularly for those fortunate enough to stand at the valley end of the car. The price is $2.50 for adults, $1.25 for children.

ABBIE GREENLEAF LIBRARY—A detour off U.S. 3 on State Route 18, a scenic, less-crowded road, leads to Franconia, a genteel and peaceful town with several good inns and restaurants. The local library, near the center of town, can provide a pleasant interlude for inveterate browsers. It's a very pretty building of light-colored brick, with marble-fronted fireplaces and a neatly manicured lawn. The Gale River flows gently on the other side of the road. A nice small-town library atmosphere. Open weekday afternoons, Monday and Wednesday evenings as well, and Saturday mornings.

SUNSET HILL HOUSE—Just off State Route 117 at Sugar Hill, this inn boasts one of the finest views in New Hampshire. The two-room cocktail lounge is a good spot to sit and, for the price of a drink, take a long look out the window westward to the Green Mountains of Vermont. Sunset, needless to say, is the best time of day for it.

BEAVER BROOK RECREATION AREA—U.S. 3 leading north to Twin Mountain is uncluttered and affords excellent views of the peaks. Thick trees hug the road on both sides. At Beaver Brook, a tiny wayside station, there's a hand pump that delivers cool, refreshing water. Also picnic tables and restrooms. Just a nice spot to pause in the outdoors.

MOUNT WASHINGTON — Even if that $9.95 price tag on the train ride to the summit seems too steep, the six-mile drive from U.S. 302 to the railroad base station is worthwhile in itself: a scenic, paved road that slices through the wilderness with scarcely a sign of civilization. If the thought of reaching the summit of the Northeast's highest peak is irresistible, there are other ways of doing it that are less costly than the cog railway. A drive up the scary auto toll road, accessible from the other side of the mountain, costs $5 per car plus $1 for each person inside. A lift in an official station wagon costs $5 a head (half price for children under 12). In good weather the gutsy can hike up free along several paths; the easiest is the Jewell Trail, which begins near the railway ticket booth. The climb is gradual but count on a long day of it: four hours each way plus whatever time is spent pausing and taking in the beauty close up. Dress very warmly: the ground at the top is frost-covered.

CRAWFORD NOTCH STATE PARK —U.S. 302 goes through this notch (New Hampshirese for mountain pass) named for Abel Crawford and his sons, who built the first hotels there and turned the White Mountains into a resort area. The route is blessedly uncluttered, with numerous inviting lookouts. Among the best features—all free—are the Silver Cascade, the Exhibition Trout Pool (near the tourist information house) and, nearby, the quarter-mile Ethan Allen Crawford Nature Trail, named for a Crawford son, said to have been seven feet tall, who was known as the Giant of the Hills.

BEAR NOTCH ROAD—To short-circuit the easternmost portion of this tour—or just for good leisurely looking—take Bear Notch Road for 29 winding, beautiful miles from the town of Bartlett, on U.S. 302, south to the Kancamagus Highway (State Route 112).

BARRETT'S BAKE SHOP—Near the intersection of U.S. 302 and State Route 16 in Glen a family of refugees from Mamaroneck, N.Y., dispenses homemade ice cream in a dozen flavors (all natural ingredients, 45 cents a cone), real New York-style Italian ice (40 cents a cup) and cheesecake made from cheese they bring in from Vermont. They import Jewish-style rye bread from New York and on Saturdays they make their own bagels. No New Yorker need feel homesick in the White Mountains. Open seven days a week.

HOUSE OF COLOR—Just a bit south of Barrett's is this large gift shop. It's only one of many in the area, but it's notable for its collection of rocks and minerals. A small polished piece of New Hampshire granite costs just 10 cents.

NORTH CONWAY—Best town for browsing. Firesigns North Country Artisans on Main Street has unusual silver jewelry, pottery, wood toys, quilts and other New England crafts; some craft or other is practiced on the spot nearly every day save Tuesdays, when the place is closed. Several other fine shops are nearby, plus a delightfully crammed "5 cents to $1" store. For a burger at the counter with the locals (90 cents), visit Korner Kitchen.

GOLDEN AGE SHOP—Down State Route 16 is the town of Albany, home of the Golden Age Shop, a simple red house to which over-65's from around the country send their handmade things for sale on consignment: everything from bird feeders to handstitched throw pillows, at modest prices. The oldest contributor is 100-year-old Nellie Towle, a local woman who sells her patchwork potholders for $3 a pair. The labor is for income and therapy both. If You Go . . .

. . . to the White Mountains to view the fall foliage, the simplest route north is Interstate 91 through Connecticut, Massachusetts and Vermont. Leave the highway in Vermont at Exit 14 (the Thetfords) or 16 (Bradford), cross the Connecticut River and weave your way east to the mountains. Count on a good seven hours from New York City.

There are motel strips on U.S. 3 around Lincoln, on U.S. 16 and other places, but pleasanter—and often cheaper — accommodations can be found a few miles away. Maple Lodge Motel and Cabins, for example, in North Woodstock (603-745-6688), offers heated cottages sleeping two for $16 (larger ones, sleeping five, are $24), including stall showers and TV—substantially less than the somewhat snazzier motels a few miles ahead in Lincoln; Maple Lodge closes Oct. 15. Sugar Hill Inn, a white-and-blue 1748 farmhouse on quiet State Route 117 near Franconia (603-823-5621), charges $18-26 for a comfortable old double. Another slightly out-of-the-way place is Sky Valley Motel and Lodges in Bartlett (603-374-2322), with a variety of rooms, starting at $16.50 for a double, and apartments and cottages at weekly rates.

It's wisest not to go on a foliage tour without reservations—kindly Chamber of Commerce people in the White Mountains have occasionally had to stow visitors on cots in churches and armories. For last-minute planners, the Jackson-Bartlett Information Center (603-383-9769) and the Mount Washington Valley Association (603-356-3171) can usually help track down whatever rooms are left.

Campers will do best at the five national campgrounds on the Kancamagus Highway. All are first-come, first-served, so morning arsival is crucial. The rate is $3. Jigger Johnson Campgrou of particular note: it has toilets. Sleeping in cars is perm

If this is the sort of thing you'd like from a travel publication—but haven't been able to find—then THE TRAVEL ADVISOR should be a welcome discovery.

You see, we're not a magazine. We carry no advertising. And we leave the usual, color-splashed travel articles to the regular vacation monthlies. That's their bag. Ours is keeping you savvy, solvent, and forewarned about anything that might spoil your travel fun.

Sometimes we even go on the offensive. Right now, we're conducting an Airline Gripe Poll we plan to use in 'motivating' the carriers to smarten up on service.

In short, we blow the whistle on any travel troubles that could gum up your vacations...tell you the whole truth, both good and bad, about all sorts of destinations...and deliver the kind of late, straight, 'inside' scoop that can turn even the most vulnerable neophyte into a worldly-wise traveler.

Interested? Then use the coupon to try THE TRAVEL ADVISOR. If you don't think we're worth the money after your first two or three issues, just tell us. You'll get a full refund, immediately. And you can keep everything we've sent you till then.

Putting Hospitality to the Test

ran down leaving an awkward silence. The Herzigs looked at each other. They had been waiting to bring something up. It was Gabrielle who spoke first.

"There is something we must ask," she said carefully, "Are you Jewish?"

"Yes," I answered warily.

"We thought so," she went on, "from what you said in your letter. And Pete, you were in the concentration camps?" He nodded. "We had to be sure," she said. Werner was frowning.

"You know," he told us, "I have read everything about it I could find. They didn't teach about this in school but I needed to understand for myself how so much insanity could happen. I still cannot understand." He stopped. We didn't have any answers either, but the lines of communication were open.

They were both anxious to delineate their own place in history. They weren't apologizing or denying but just establishing who they were. The Herzigs were both a few years younger than we: Werner was a baby during the war and Gabrielle wasn't born until afterward. Her father had been a colonel in the Wehrmacht, a regular Prussian, with cropped hair and dueling scars that he was still proud of.

Werner told us that his father died in 1942. His stepfather was a schoolmaster, a very kind and idealistic man, but by the same token a Nazi. "He didn't understand what they were when he joined the party," Werner said. "He was not worldly enough to see what kind of people they were." There wasn't anything more to say; it had been a difficult conversation for all of us and no one wanted to hear or repeat platitudes, so we said good night and shook hands and went to bed.

Next day, coincidentally, we got a call from a friend who was spending the year in Boston. She often visited us on weekends and holidays because her home was in Alabama, too far away to get back too easily. She wondered if we were free because she had a few days off. We have another small room in addition to the study. Pete told her to come on down and meet the company.

Odessa (who is black) and I first met in 1963 when we lived in the same dorm at summer school. I had finished college and was taking a crash program of education credits so I could get a teaching job. She was a teacher already, at an all-black high school in Birmingham, and was going to school in the North for two months. In September we returned to our respective cities but we had become close enough friends to stay in touch permanently, even when we were a thousand miles apart.

In 1963 Birmingham was so oppressively segregated that Odessa walked into her classroom one day and found her entire 12th-grade civics class missing—they were all in jail, having been arrested by Bull Connor for sitting in at a lunch counter. She turned the experience into an object lesson on the Bill of Rights. Shortly afterward, however, she quit both teaching and the South to take a community development job in New York. For several years we saw a great deal of her, until a former student convinced her to return: They could use her help with a new social welfare agency that was just being set up. A year later she came north for a visit and announced that the South was starting to change for the better.

By 1973, 10 years after we first met, Odessa had risen to be director of a regional poverty program covering four counties. The Ford Foundation awarded her a fellowship to study Urban Administration in Boston and, she especially relished this irony, before she left, the City of Birmingham held a testimonial dinner in her honor.

Werner and Gabrielle were fascinated with Odessa. They seemed amazed that she would prefer to go back to Alabama to live. Gabrielle told me afterward: "We are learning things. In Germany we are hearing so much about black and white in America, and about North and South. But people are really more complicated than that. We would enjoy meeting more of your friends like this."

We promised to do what we could and in the next two weeks tried to get the Herzigs together with some of the people we think are really special. We took them up to see our friends John and Marian. John used to be an auto mechanic but recently he went into business repairing and restoring antique clocks; Marian keeps the books and helps pay the bills by working as a dental hygienist.

Pat and Don came up from North Carolina where they are both in graduate school. Pat is a New Yorker who was once a student of mine in high school; her husband is a gangling 6-foot-3-inch-part-Cherokee, part-redneck-Florida-good-old-boy who graduated college at 18 and is finishing up a Ph.D in classics. He entertained us all mimicking an entire seminar on Herodotus in which the class was desperately trying to convey to its professor—a semi-senile gentleman who shuffled about the campus with a crablike gait—that he was forcing the same student to present the same paper for the third week in a row.

One day we piled into the car and drove to Boston to stay overnight with my husband's brother, camping out on the livingroom rug. Sam Stern is a teacher-administrator at Boston University, his wife Doris an electron microscopist there. In addition to providing a crash pad, they organized our day: Sam arranged for us to have a guided tour of an M.I.T. lab that Werner was interested in; Doris took the day off and shepherded us around, from shopping at the Harvard Co-op to riding the swan boats in the Public Garden.

The following evening we drove to the Harvard Married Students Apartments to have dinner with some other old friends, Gail and Earl. Earl had refused to report for induction into the Army during the Vietnam War and they had spent the first two years of their marriage waiting for him to be arrested at any moment. Then, unexpectedly, he was granted Conscientious Objector status; he applied and was admitted to Harvard Law School. One week before classes began he was summarily ordered to report to Los Angeles to do alternate service as an orderly in a mental hospital. He did his two years and returned to Harvard. Now he and his wife have a 2-year-old child, another on the way, a pile of debts and one more year of law school to go.

We took one more trip with the Herzigs; just before they were to move we went down to New York, not so much to see the city as to pay respects. Again we camped in sleeping bags—in my mother's living room—walked around town and looked at everything, had dinner, saw a show. The next day we went to visit Pete's parents.

It was a tense situation for us: We were bringing the children of a Wehrmacht colonel and a Nazi idealist to have afternoon tea with the survivors of Bergen-Belsen, and we did not know what to expect. My in-laws were unusually formal, but graciously so. They made a point of offering everyone Lowenbrau beer and cold cuts from a German delicatessen to make the guests feel at home.

To hide their nervousness, Werner and Gabrielle played with our son. It was apparent that they really liked him, which pleased his grandparents; and I think the grandparents were impressed also with what we had come to like so much—Werner's integrity, natural courtesy and whimsical humor, as well as Gabrielle's high spirits, along with her capacity to be an attentive and appreciative listener.

Nothing profound was said, but when we left it was clear that the goodbyes were warmer and more genuine than the hellos had been. Pete asked his stepfather about the encounter afterward, wondering if he had felt any misgivings about having our visitors there. He thought for a moment and said, "No, they were only children, and how can you hate the children?"

On the Herzigs' last night with us we sat outside in the dark, listening to crickets and reminiscing about all the people they had met. They were moved by the readiness of everyone to whom we introduced them to share themselves and go out of their way for strangers. They also admired the determination and fixedness of purpose with which the people they met went about pursuing whatever it was that had meaning and importance for them. Each of these people was listening in some sense to a different drummer; life hadn't been easy for any of them, but they were resilient and hopeful for the future. Seeing this through foreign eyes, I felt that it was the real American opportunity, the real America that Werner and Gabrielle were hoping to find. It's just ironic that so many of us are too caught up in getting and spending to hang on to it.

That last night's conversation was a long one. The Herzigs spoke of their own families back in Germany and their plans for the future. It was late when Werner said, "You know, it was very generous of your parents to have us to their home and to treat us with such kindness. It means a lot to us."

"We were wondering," Gabrielle added, "do you think those other people we were supposed to have stayed with —the ones in Larchmont and Maine— did they not want to have us because we're Germans?"

"It's possible," I said.

"Ah, we thought perhaps this was so," Gabrielle said. It was the only time, apart from the first night, that we ever touched on the subject of the past or acknowledged the barrier. Now, by virtue of our being together and caring about each other, we had made our separate peace.

AIR-INDIA ANNOUNCES ANOTHER CHOICE LONDON THEATRE SEASON.

If you're looking for an 8-day London Theatre Tour, choose the one that gives you some choice.

The Air-India 8-day London Theatre Tour.

We give you four theatre tickets. Three tickets to any plays you want to see. If the play's running and if there are tickets available, you've got it. (Only exceptions: no opera, ballet or Royal Shakespeare Company.)

The fourth ticket is to a performance at the exciting new National Theatre. And a guided tour is included.

How does all this stack up to other airlines' theatre tours? Well, some of them don't give you as many tickets. And some of them don't give you as much choice. In fact, some of them don't give you any choice at all.

An Air-India 8-day London Theatre Tour also gives you a great flight round-trip, 7 nights in a good hotel with private bath, an Avis car for three days.

We do all this for the same – or perhaps less – than the airlines that don't give you so much choice. Which makes the whole thing an easy choice, right?

See your travel agent or fill in the coupon.

AIR-INDIA
8-DAY LONDON THEATRE TOURS.

October 28, 1976. One of the world's great hotels sails to the South Pacific.

Next Fall, you can come with us to a place where life is warm and gentle.

The South Pacific.

You'll see Tahiti. With its lush green forests, warm blue lagoons, soft white beaches and beautiful golden people.

You'll see Moorea, where the Tahitians go to get away from it all. And Bora Bora, which is probably the most beautiful little island in the world.

We'll take you to Tonga, where the natives walk on fire. To New Zealand. Where you'll visit a Maori village. Explore a cave lit by glowworms. And cruise up a fjord.

You'll call at Hobart, the capital of Tasmania, with its fine old Georgian architecture and unusual charm. Spend a couple of days in big, friendly Sydney. You'll see kangaroos. Koalas. And all kinds of this huge continent's unique wildlife. Then you sail home across 10,000 miles of blue Pacific, stopping at Fiji, Samoa and Hawaii on the way.

The entire cruise is 50 days. Which means you'll have a full seven weeks to enjoy the all First Class sailing style of the Royal Viking Sky. Of Norwegian registry. And spirit. Designed to bring you all the comforts of a great hotel. Your stateroom will be big and comfortable, with a sweeping view of the sea. (94% of all passengers have outside staterooms.)

The dining room is set high on an upper deck, walled with windows, and large enough to serve every passenger on board at a single, relaxed seating.

At dinner, you can choose from entrees like Blue Mountain Brook Trout Meuniere. Steak au Poivre. Crepes a la Reine. Plus local specialties like Sydney Rock Oysters and Tahitian Pamplemousse.

And you'll be well taken care of, since there are three crew members for every five passengers.

There's more to do on board than you'll find at most great resorts. There's skeet shooting. A gym. A sauna. A heated pool. You can play bridge. Take in the lectures in our enrichment program. Catch a film in the ship's theatre. And every evening at sea, there's a whole variety of live entertainment in our bars and lounges.

This 50-day cruise begins in San Diego October 28, in Los Angeles on the 29th and in San Francisco on the 30th. There's also a 45-day South Seas sailing in mid-January, 1977. And a 69-day Circle Pacific cruise in early February that lets you see the entire South Pacific plus the Orient. And this year, we're offering a special 32-day Christmas/New Year cruise to Mexico, Tahiti and Hawaii.

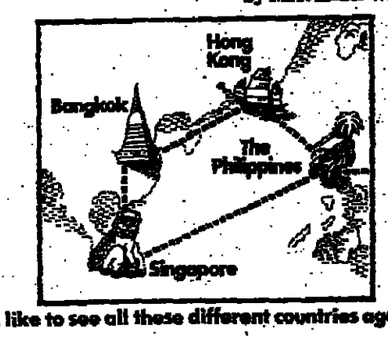
by Mrs. Hazel Walker, Tourist



"I'd like to see all these different countries again."

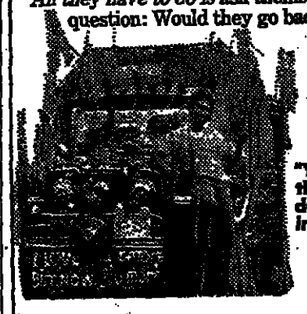
"Where should I go next time? That's been my first thought at the end of every tour Al and I have ever taken. But the 16-day Orient Enchantment Tour on Philippine Airlines was different. It only cost about $1200,* and we were treated like the most important people in the Orient.

There are so many things I'd like to go back and see again. The bargain shopping in Manila was fantastic. And what food! We went to the special Gala Mabuhay dinner in Manila with native entertainment and stuffed ourselves silly for 4½ hours. I'll never forget it. Al's waistline hasn't forgotten it either.

I loved the Tiger Balm Garden in Singapore, and the temples in Bangkok and Hong Kor saying, 'Hazel, I never thought we'd see anything as beautiful as this.' And believe me, Al's n

The only thing I'm going to do different next time is stay for 21 days, so we'll also get to some time in Japan and Taiwan.

This all means that Al and I can't wait to take the Orient Enchantment Tour again. It a that anybody who takes a tour can judge how good it is. All they have to do is ask themselves one simple question: Would they go back on it again?"



"You can't believe the fun Al and I had driving around Manila in one of these!"

Mr. Moyne, who says that roulottes are genuine gypsy s built by French and Italian s, writes: "I rent authentic l and real adventure. Not coun- or the meek." Rates are about $180 a week per cart from October to May; about $300 in midsummer. Mr. Moyne's address is Domaine de Saint Sauveur, 84320 Entraigues-sur-Sorgue, Vaucluse, France. The town is seven miles from Avignon.

The Italian idea is a vacanza in guscio (guscio meaning shell). The shell is a plastic "shell-like house" in an out-of-the-way spot by the sea. The units, which have two, three or four beds and cooking facilities, are offered by the Italian Touring Club, a motoring organization. They are located at the Marina di Camerota in the Calabria region in the toe of Italy; on the Tremiti Islands in the Adriatic, and on La Maddalena, an island off Sardinia. Rates run from $75 to $90 a person per week. For further information, write to the Touring Club Italiano, Corso Italia 10, Milan, Italy.

THE PRICE OF DRIVING

How much does it cost to own and operate an automobile? A study completed by two statisticians at the Department of Transportation in Washington, D. C., based on maintenance and other costs in suburban Baltimore, Md., provides some information. The cost of running a new standard-size car in 1976 that cost $4,864 will be $2,716, Lanrence L. Liston and Tony Aiken report in a booklet published by the department. The figure allows for $1,215 in depreciation, which is always greatest—about 24 percent—in the first year of a car's life. The total cost per mile in that first year is 18.73 cents.

During its anticipated 10-year, 100,000-mile trip from assembly line to junkyard, a standard-size 1976 car's owning and operating costs—based on current prices—will total $17,878.96 or 17.9 cents a mile. (In 1974, when the authors made their last study, the cost per mile was 15.9 cents.) The booklet adds that it will cost the owner of a 1976 compact $14,561.46 or 14.56 cents a mile during its 10-year life; the owner of a 1976 subcompact will pay $12,638.35 or 12.64 cents a mile during the same period.

During the 10 years, Liston and Aiken report, the standard-size car owner will pay $4,668.7 for 6,667 gallons of gasoline, $3,664 on maintenance and repairs, $1,678 for insurance and $2,209 for garaging, parking and tolls.

The authors took 60.1 cents as the current average price of unleaded gasoline. They put insurance on a new car at $214 in the first year, sliding to $140 for each of the last five years with the abandonment of collision coverage. The value of the car after 10 years was assumed to be $35. The

A WELL RUN AIRLINE DOESN'T TAKE PEOPLE ON SLOPPY TOURS.

INTRODUCING SAS VIKING VENTURES FROM $421 to $1015

Tours have always been considered a good way to see Europe.

Unfortunately, a lot of people come home remembering all the things that went wrong on their tours instead of what went right.

WE DON'T TREAT YOU LIKE A SECOND CLASS CITIZEN JUST BECAUSE YOU'RE FLYING ECONOMY.

Well, at Scandinavian Airlines, we make a habit out of making sure the only memories you have of a vacation are good ones.

You see, we've made money 13 years in a row. And one reason we've been so successful at running our airline is that we know something about tours.

Tours that are well planned and put together by leading travel agents. Tours that are reasonably priced. Tours that deliver everything we say they will.

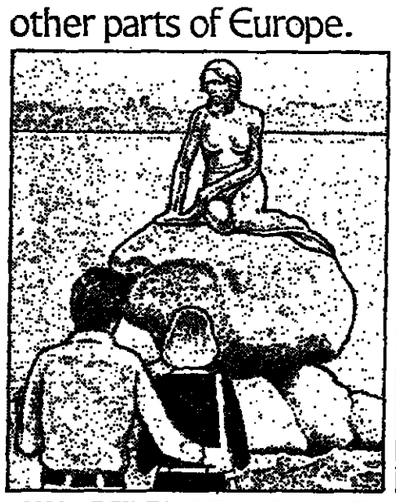
On SAS, for example, you fly with one of the most intensively trained flight crews in the industry. You enjoy food so superb, we've been appointed a member of the world's oldest and most respected food society — "La Chaine des Rotisseurs".

While in Europe, you'll never lose a night's sleep over a hotel on our tours. Every hotel is checked inside and out. And if there's anything that isn't right, we won't send you there.

If the thought of getting up at 7 in the morning and being herded around all day has kept you off a tour until now, it shouldn't keep you off an SAS Fall/Winter vacation.

Our vacations give you time to see the sights that we think are important and then plenty of free time to explore things on your own. Naturally, if you'd like some suggestions on places to go, we help.

For this fall and winter, we have 11 vacations you can choose from. Including ones that offer Scandinavia alone or in combination with other parts of Europe.

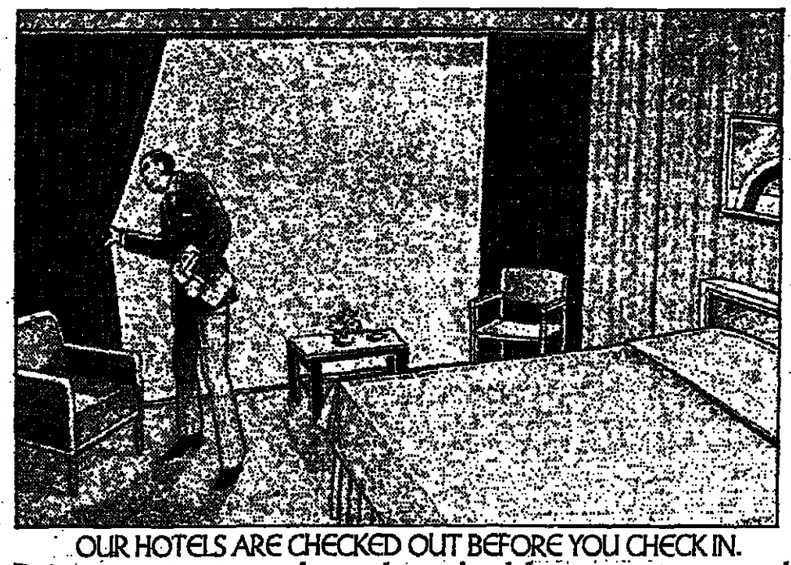


YOU GET TIME TO DO WHAT WE THINK IS IMPORTANT.

AND TIME TO DO WHAT YOU THINK IS.

If you'd like more information, clip out the coupon. Or call a travel agent and ask about SAS.

We'll give you a good price on a European vacation. Without making you pay for it in the long run.



OUR HOTELS ARE CHECKED OUT BEFORE YOU CHECK IN.

Icelandic has more to offer than the lowest jet fares of any scheduled airline to Luxembourg, in the heart of Europe.

We also have excellent hot meals, complimentary wines, after dinner cognac and attentive, courteous service.

In short, we have the same kind of service you'd get from other airlines, without the same high costs. Because our air fares aren't just a little lower. They're a lot lower.

For example, on a 1-13 day trip we can save you $281 (Cost: $395). On 22-45 days we can save you $105 (Cost: $359). And on our APEX fare, we save you $52 (Cost: $310).*

That's a lot of money.

And it stands to reason, the more you save on the way to Europe, the more you'll have to spend when you get there.

Take a Caribbean cruise American Express style.

Take a 13/14-day winter cruise on the TSS Atlas.* American Express wants your Caribbean cruise to be an all-out success.

So first we chartered a ship. Not just any ship. We chartered a beauty. She's everything a 14-day cruise ship should be.

Three swimming pools. Five bars. Three lounges. A theater. Shopping gallery. Sauna. Discothèque. And staterooms that convert to sitting rooms by day. Plus 20,000 feet of open deck space.

In fact, she's the flagship of the Epirotiki Line. Nothing less would do for you and American Express.

Then we refined the menu.

We saw to it that the menus were deliciously Continental with an occasional Greek specialty.

In short, we made this a very appetizing 14-day cruise.

We handpicked our cruise director.

We singled out an experienced man to make sure the service wasn't just up to par, but above. To be certain the entertainment was first-rate. From the authentic Greek musicians to the swinging dance band.

To make sure your Caribbean cruise was an all-out success.

We charted an enviable itinerary.

Any cruise line would be happy to follow our path. We sail from Port Everglades, Florida, for 14 days to Cap Haitien, Ocho Rios, Aruba, La Guaira (Caracas, Venezuela), Grenada, Barbados, Guadeloupe and St. Thomas. A special 15-day Christmas cruise, at an additional cost, embarks Dec. 18 and includes Trinidad. A 13-day cruise leaves Jan. 2 (excluding Barbados). 14-day cruises sail Jan. 15, 29, Feb. 12, 26, March 12.

*The Atlas is registered in Greece.

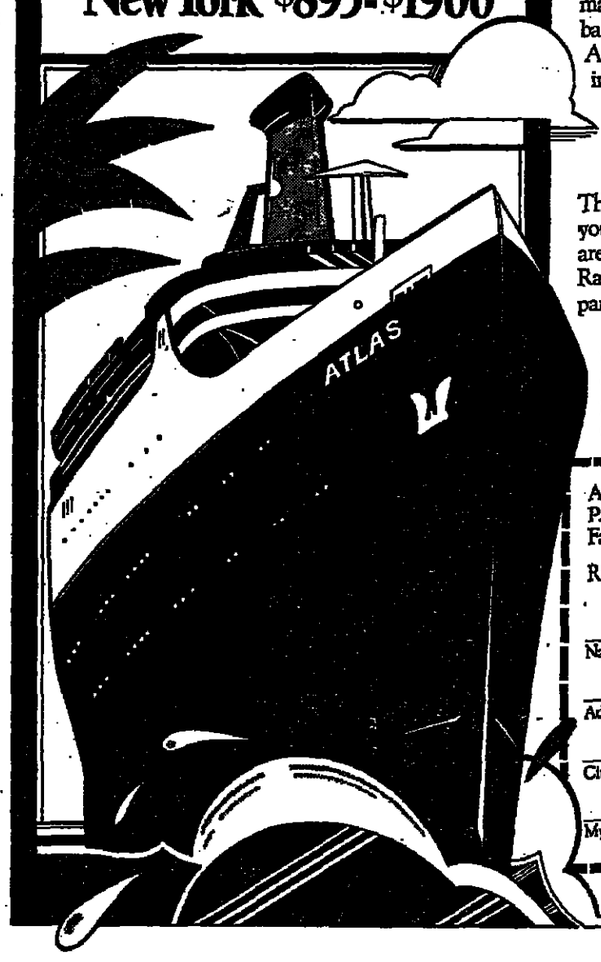
Fly/cruises from New York $895-$1900



We priced it right—only $895-$1900.

The price looks even better when you consider that most staterooms are outside and have two lower beds. Rates are per person, double occupancy, and include air fare from N.Y.

This cruise is sold by travel agents and American Express Travel Service offices. Simply mail coupon for brochure. We've done everything else.
